RECENT NEWS FOR THE FIREARMS COMMUNITY BY MARK CHESNUT

Freelance writer and editor Mark Chesnut is the owner/editorial director at Red Setter Communications LLC. An avid hunter, shooter and political observer, he has been covering Second Amendment issues and politics on a near-daily basis for the past 25 years.

PRESTO CHANGE-O: NEW FEDERAL AWB PROPOSAL DOESN'T MENTION "ASSAULT WEAPONS"

By Mark Chesnut

Shutterstock By Scott Maxwell LuMaxArt

Having failed over the past few decades to get an “assault weapons” ban passed, two U.S. senators are again proposing such a ban, but giving it a different name in an attempt to garner support from those in Congress who have long opposed such a restriction.

Calling it the “Gas-Operated Semi-Automatic Firearms Exclusion Act,” Sen. Martin Heinrich, D-New Mexico, and Independent Sen. Angus King of Maine introduced a measure on Nov. 30 that would ban nearly all AR-style and many other semi-auto rifles, along with firearm magazines that can hold more than 10 rounds of ammunition.

According to the language of the measure, “The term ‘semi-automatic firearm’ means any firearm that upon initiating the firing sequence, fires the first chambered cartridge and uses a portion of the energy of the firing cartridge to extract the expended cartridge case; chamber the next round; and prepare the firing mechanism to fire again; requires a separate pull, release, push or initiation of the trigger to fire each cartridge; and is not a machine gun.”

In a press release explaining the legislation, Sen. King said that earlier “assault weapons” focused too much on cosmetics and not enough on function.

“For years, I have said that rather than using the appearance of these guns to restrict them, we should instead focus on how these weapons actually work and the features that make them especially dangerous,” King said. “The Gas-Operated Semiautomatic Firearm Exclusion (GOSAFE) Act addresses the lethal capacity weapons like the one used in Lewiston and most of the deadliest mass shootings across the country.”

Interestingly, the definition cuts a much wider swath than just gas-operated firearms, as the measure’s language later includes in the ban “a recoil-operated system that utilizes the recoil force to unlock the breech bolt and then to complete the cycle of extracting, ejecting and reloading.”

The measure also would outlaw common normal-capacity magazines that come with most semi-automatic rifles. Under the proposed law, detachable magazines capable of holding more than 10 rounds would be banned, although those owning such magazines before the law takes effect would be able to keep them.

Going forward, however, owners of such magazines could only transfer them to family members or relinquish them to the government in a “buy-back” program included in the measure.

Of course, gun-ban organizations, including Brady (formerly Handgun Control Inc.), were thrilled with the announcement.

“The GOSAFE Act will take significant steps to end the proliferation of weapons that are designed for the battlefield and mitigate targeted mass violence,” said Chris Brown, Brady president. “Brady thanks Senator Heinrich and Senator King for introducing this legislation to help free America from the epidemic of mass shootings.

It will be interesting to see if the proposed “assault weapons” ban’s change in language will garner additional support in Congress. Past proposals banning semi-automatic rifles have largely been rejected by Congress after the Clinton Gun Ban of the 1990s had no measurable effect on violent crime and was allowed to sunset after 10 years. FN

CARRY AMMO

Two quality 9mm defensive loads—Sierra's 124-grain THD (Target Hunt Defense) on the left, and Black Hills' 115-grain EXP (Extra Power) on the right.

Back when I was just getting into handguns, most ammunition makers had just one or maybe two lines of defensive handgun ammunition, and that was it. Winchester's Silvertip. Federal's Hydra-Shok, etc. Now, not only are there a lot more ammunition manufacturers, they have much more extensive offerings when it comes to defensive ammunition. This might seem confusing, but in reality, it's not—they are all pretty darn good, you just have to figure out which best suits your needs. Let me cover two 9mm defensive loads—one new, and one new to me.

Sierra (SierraBullets.com)

Sierra THD—this is a brand-new product from Sierra, and while it will soon join their regular lineup it currently is only being offered as part of a package deal—buy a Walther PDP pistol, get 100 rounds of Sierra's 9mm THD (WaltherArms.com). THD stands for Target Hunt Defense, and this is meant to be general-purpose ammunition good for everything. Sierra is one of the biggest names in the ammunition industry (they've been around 70 years), but they made their bones making bullets, and only (relatively) recently have gotten into selling loaded ammunition. Sierra bullets can be found in ammunition loaded by just about every U.S. ammunition company.

The 124-grain THD bullet is a traditional cup-and-core jacketed hollow point, a copper jacket over a lead core, with a somewhat large cavity. The advertised velocity is 1,090 fps, although you should remember that is out of a full-length test barrel, and the speed you'll get out of a smaller CCW gun will be less, sometimes 10% less depending.

In the Clear Ballistics blocks the Sierra THD penetrated 17 inches and expanded very nicely. The JHP has a big cavity.

Black Hills (Black-Hills.com)

Black Hills EXP—I'm not sure when they came out with it, but I recently became aware of Black Hills' 9mm EXP offering. This is a 115-grain bullet loaded to produce

1,200 fps out of a four-inch test barrel. EXP stands for Extra Power, and this ammunition is hotter than the standard 9mm load while being a bit less than a true +P load. The bullet they use is a Sierra JHP, an older proven design with a smaller cavity—it has proven itself to be reliable in feeding, while still expanding.

The Test

To test these bullets, I first chronographed them, and there were no surprises there—out of the 4.4-inch barrel of my SIG P226 the velocities were as advertised. The 124-grain Sierra THD provided 1,088 fps, and the Black Hills 115-grain EXP gave me 1,209 fps. Recoil on both was a little hotter than baseline 9mm (which traditionally is a 115-grain bullet at 1,150 fps), but just barely, and quite controllable. They especially seem a good choice, recoil-wise, if you're looking to feed a smaller carry gun.

I decided to do a little gel testing as well. I had several blocks from Clear Ballistics (CB) on hand. CB advertises these as having the same density/providing the same performance as true FBI-spec 10% ordnance gelatin blocks, but that's not true. They're close, but generally the Clear Ballistics blocks are a little less dense, so you (probably) get a bit deeper penetration and (possibly) less expansion than with true gel blocks. Their advantage is they are convenient, reusable, and produce consistent results.

Black Hills' 115-grain EXP is not quite a +P in velocity, which means it's a good choice for smaller guns. In the Clear Ballistics blocks it penetrated 13.25-inch and expanded to 0.54".

Sierra's 124-grain THD bullet penetrated the blocks 17 inches (through the first 16-inch block and into the second), which is very good performance. The bullet expanded evenly, and it expanded to a .53-inch diameter. It retained basically 100% of its weight, with no fragmenting.

Black Hills' EXP load penetrated the block 13.25 inches and expanded to .54-inch diameter. This is exactly the comparative performance I was expecting—the lighter faster bullet expanded a bit more, and didn't penetrate as deeply. It did not fragment or lose any pieces of jacket either.

FYI: the FBI thinks that to do its job properly, a defensive pistol bullet should penetrate between 12 to 18-inches. Any less and you won't hit vital organs, and any more and you risk overpenetration.

These are two types of ammo meant to be carried in defensive pistols and used in that role. But Federal just came out with a new 9mm Gold Medal Action Pistol Match load that I want to use to make a point (FederalPremium.com). This is accurate ammunition meant for competition, and is deliberately soft shooting for reduced recoil. It features a FMJ-FP (full metal jacket flat point) bullet and a velocity roughly 950 fps—which is honestly hotter than you'd want if you were handloading USPSA/IDPA ammo to make minor power factor (125 PF), but I understand Federal wanted a built-in margin of error and went for a 140 PF (bullet weight x velocity/1,000).

A lot of people still carry full metal jacket ammo in their carry guns, and this is a huge mistake. Unless you are quickly stops what he's doing, that hollow point acts like a drag chute on a race car, slowing it down to (hopefully) keep that bullet from zipping right through the bad guy and into a bystander. Unless you're trying to shoot through cover (something all handguns suck at) you won't have an issue with under-penetration. You don't need FMJ bullets to reach the vital organs of the bad guy.

Most 9mm FMJ ammunition will penetrate FBI-spec gel blocks 20–24-inches, depending on bullet weight, nose profile, and velocity. This is generally too far and will almost guarantee overpenetration, while (more importantly) transferring very little impact energy to the bad guy. Out of curiosity, I tested Federal's Gold Medal Match 9mm load through my Clear Ballistics blocks.

Again, this is a slow heavy bullet, heavy for caliber, but with a flat nose—however, that combination was apparently just right for penetration. This load penetrated my two blocks laid end-to-end easily. At 32-inches of penetration, the bullets kept on going. I fired a number of rounds, and they all performed just the same. The gel blocks barely even twitched. Just like a bad guy.

Pistols work very poorly (compared to rifles and shotguns) at stopping fights, so you want every advantage you can get. Ammunition loaded with modern hollowpoints, like the Sierra THD and Black Hills EXP loads, give you what you want. Save that FMJ ammunition for practice and competition. TN so broke that you can't afford food, you should be putting hollowpoints in your carry gun. Seriously. Stop making excuses, or trying to justify it, because all of your reasons are wrong. You deserve better ammo in your carry gun—you owe it to yourself and everyone else.

Federal's Gold Medal Action Pistol is a great practice/competition load, but FMJ ammo like this should be avoided for self-defense.

The purpose of a hollow point isn't just to expand, transferring more shock to the bad guy and creating a larger wound cavity, so he more 6MM ARC vs. 6.5MM GRENDL?

Is the ARC's Valor True, and Does It Have What It Takes to Slay Grendel?

The 2004 vintage 6.5mm Grendel is an impressive cartridge which has defied the odds. Introduced by a small AR-15 manufacturer, Alexander Arms, at the same time Remington released their 6.8x43mm Rem Special Purpose Cartridge, most figured the 6.5mm Grendel would be a brief footnote in history and quickly forgotten. Instead, the plucky Grendel stood toe to toe with the giant from Remington and gave better than it got. They battled for years until Hornady made it a SAAMI standard and Wolf Performance Ammunition introduced economical steel case ammunition in 6.5mm Grendel. With that the Green Giant's SPC was seemingly vanquished. Today the 6.5mm Grendel is recognized as a superlative intermediate cartridge which performs well in barrels from 12 to 24 inches. A fantastic whitetail deer, pig, and coyote cartridge it has endeared itself to hunters.

Despite its moderate muzzle velocity, the Grendel outperforms traditional intermediate cartridges such as the 5.45x39mm, 5.56x45mm, .22 Nosler, .224 Valkyrie, 6x45mm, and

7.62x39mm by using efficient projectiles with relatively high ballistic coefficients (BC) and sectional density combined with a good payload. These retain velocity and energy well. However, in 2020, a new challenger appeared on the horizon, Hornady's 6x38mm Advanced Rifle Cartridge. Like the 6.8x43mm Rem SPC before it, the 6mm ARC was developed for a specialized Department of Defense (DoD) group. The question I and many others have is, "How well does the 6mm ARC stack up against the 6.5mm Grendel? Which is the better choice?"

Since it was introduced in 2004 the 6.5mm Grendel has gone on to impress hunters and competitive shooters alike with its exterior ballistics and terminal performance. (Photo courtesy Hornady)

6mm ARC

Why exactly does the 6mm ARC exist? What was it designed to do? According to statements from Hornady, a DoD entity requested a cartridge with certain capabilities. We can deduce these as greater effective range and better exterior and terminal ballistics with increased penetration over the 5.56x45mm. Basically, it sounds like they were looking for 7.62x51mm range and penetration but in a 5.56mm sized platform with less recoil and lighter ammunition load.

Like the 6.5mm Grendel, the 6mm ARC was specifically designed to fit within the confines of an AR-15 STANAG magazine well. Hornady's 6mm ARC, is not an entirely new cartridge design. Rather, it is based on the 6.5mm Grendel, which in turn was based upon the old .220 Russian case. The engineers at Hornady examined Pohjoispaa/Alexander's 6.5mm Grendel cartridge case design, and then made some changes to optimize it for their specific application. So, it does share the same .441-inch diameter case-head with the 6.5mm Grendel, as well as the .220 Russian and 7.62x39mm.

The shoulder though has been moved back to facilitate loading the very long for caliber 6mm projectiles. Shoulder angle is 30 degrees, case length is 1.49 inches, and it has an overall cartridge length of 2.26 inches. Max pressure is a mild 52,000 psi, to ensure a 6mm ARC AR-15 has a long service life. The 6mm ARC also shares the thicker .059-inch rim of the 6.5mm Grendel which is significantly more robust than the .038-inch rim of the 5.56x45mm. This aids reliability. As they have the same case-head diameter, the 6mm ARC utilizes the same AR-15 bolt as the 6.5mm Grendel. These are readily available and of known quality.

While the 6.5mm Grendel was designed around .264-inch projectiles running from 95 to 144 grains, the cartridge is really at its best with projectiles weighing from 107 to 123 grains. The 6mm ARC on the other hand is designed around modern .243-inch projectiles running from 103 to 108 grains. It was specifically designed to utilize very long for caliber projectiles with very high ballistic coefficients to enhance exterior ballistics. By using very efficient projectiles, the 6mm ARC, like the 6.5mm Grendel, doesn't need to chase after muzzle velocity the way a 5.56x45mm does. From an 18-inch 6.5mm Grendel barrel, firing Hornady's 123-grain Black ELD-M load, I recorded an average muzzle velocity of 2,520 fps. While initial velocity isn't blistering fast, the efficient projectiles allow it to retain greater velocity down range.

According to Hornady's ballistic lab, their 6mm ARC 108-grain ELD Match load will average 2,660 fps from a 20-inch barrel, 2,600 fps from an 18-inch barrel, 2,530 fps cutting it back to 16 inches and about 2,350 fps from a short 12-inch tube. While at initial glance, the 12-inch barrel's velocity looks rather ho-hum, exterior ballistics are actually pretty good compared to traditional intermediate cartridges. This is due to this projectile's G1 BC of 0.536. This is substantially higher than either a traditional Accuracy of both cartridges is excellent when teamed with a good rifle. This three-inch plate was hit with a 6.5mm Grendel at 500 yards.

Magazines are the weak-point of both cartridges; this is due to the dimensions of the AR-15 magazine well.

.308-inch 175-grain Matching (G1 .496) or a .224-inch 77-grain Match-King (G1 .372).

6.5mm Grendel

The 6.5mm Grendel is a proven performer in the hunting field and works very well ringing steel out to about 800 yards. When it comes to hunting the 6.5mm Grendel has an advantage over the 6mm ARC in that it puts a larger diameter and heavier payload on target. Mark LaRue, the owner of LaRue Tactical, demonstrated the 6.5mm Grendel’s capabilities shortly after its introduction when he poleaxed a big 5x5 elk bull at over 400 yards. He dropped it with one shot. In the years that followed, hunters across the US were delighted by how the cartridge performs on whitetail, coyotes, and pigs.

Compared to the 6mm ARC, the 6.5mm Grendel has a few basic disadvantages. 6.5mm Grendel ammunition weighs slightly more, and it has a heavier recoil impulse. The heavier 6mm match projectiles will have a higher BC and greater sectional density. The 6mm ARC has a velocity advantage when using high BC projectiles for better exterior ballistics and greater retained energy downrange. Depending upon projectile design, the 6mm ARC can have an advantage when it comes to penetrating intermediate barriers as well. When it comes to penetrating intermediate barriers, impact velocity, projectile design, projectile weight, projectile diameter, and sectional density all come into play. A higher velocity, smaller diameter projectile with greater sectional density will have an edge.

The surge in popularity of the 6.5mm Grendel was sparked by the introduction of economical steel case ammunition from Russia. With the demise of steel case ammunition, and inflated prices due to years of panic buying and ammo shortages, interest in the 6.5mm Grendel seems to have cooled. It’s a great cartridge, but many shooters are returning to their

5.56x45mm AR-15s for recreational shooting and relegating their 6.5mm Grendels to just hunting.

Magazine issues are the only real drawback to the 6.5mm Grendel, and the 6mm ARC will have similar issues. The internal dimensions of the AR-15 magazine well dictate the external dimensions of the magazine. The use of the 6.5mm Grendel base cartridge dictates the internal dimensions of the magazine. There is very little room between the two. Due to this it’s not possible to produce polymer dual-column dual-feed 6mm ARC or 6.5mm Grendel magazines. There simply isn’t enough room. ARC/Grendel magazines are typically produced from thin stainless steel for a reason. Some work great, others give issues.

The perfect solution would be what LWRCI did with their SIX8 6.8x43mm Rem SPC project. They changed the magazine well dimensions, made it larger and optimized the magazine for the cartridge. I have long stated this is what the 6.5mm Grendel needs. But no one wants to move away from the STANAG standard. That said, a good 6.5mm Grendel magazine runs well, and magazines have improved since the cartridge was introduced in 2004.

Which is Best?

Which is better the 6mm ARC or 6.5mm Grendel? There is no clear answer, it will depend entirely on what you are using it for. A certain US military unit picked the 6mm ARC over the Grendel for their specific needs.

For medium-size game, the 6.5mm Grendel with its heavier and larger diameter payload will have an advantage. Here at Firearms News, I have been impressed by the 6.5mm Grendel while our Digital Editor, Jack Oller, has had great success in the hunting field with the 6mm ARC. It looks like it’s a horse race. We Test Vortex Optics' Big Bad 6-36x Wolf for One Year

The information age we live in has led to a more informed buyer when it comes to riflescopes.

Today's marksman and hunter demands more from a scope intended for long range use than his father and grandfather did. He reads niche magazines, pours over blogs and websites, and is constantly watching videos to become informed on what features he needs. He also stays up on the latest trends. Due to this, marksmen today have very specific demands when it comes to riflescopes. They look for certain features, and if a scope doesn't have them it's passed by.

This is especially true when it comes to reticles. Marksmen of today demand more from a reticle than they did decades ago. They want the reticle broken down with finer delineations to allow easier ranging and more consistent holds. They also desire variable power scopes with ever increasing magnification increase ratios. Basically, buyers today just demand more from a riflescope. One impressive optic developed specifically to fulfill the desires of today's demanding long-range shooter is the Vortex 6-36x56mm Razor HD Gen III.

Vortex Optics seemingly came out of nowhere, and in a shockingly short amount of time they carved out a large portion of the riflescope market. Their economical scopes have made them popular with the working man. Whatever you can afford, Vortex likely has a scope in that price range. However, make no mistake they made their name with their high-end Razor line. Their 6-36x56mm Razor HD Gen III scope seen here is neither economical nor affordable. It's a flagship scope intended to impress and to show off both the design and manufacturing capabilities of Vortex. Frankly, it's an impressive optical instrument with an equally impressive price tag.

In days of my youth, a 6x scope was considered good for general purpose use while 36x was used for benchrest competition. This Razor's magnification starts at 6x and zooms all the way to 36x on the top end. Egad! Built on a 34mm tube, it measures 15.3 inches long and weighs in at a hefty 45.1 ounces.

Glancing at the front of this optic and you'll notice a big 56mm objective lens. The optical system features HD optically indexed lenses which are fully multi-coated using Vortex's Plasma Tech coating process and XR Plus coatings. ArmorTek ultra-hard scratch resistant coatings are also incorporated to protect the exterior lenses. The result is an extremely impressive optical image with excellent light transmission, color rendition and resolution. Plus, the optical design is fairly forgiving to eye placement.

The locking turrets are very big, easy to manipulate and feature .1 Mil adjustments with 10 Mills per full turret rotation. Vortex does incorporate a Zero Stop into their system, so you can quickly and easily return to zero. Pull straight out on the turret to unlock it to allow making adjustments, push straight in to lock it into place. The adjustments are precise with distinct audible and tactile clicks. Total adjustment range is 36.1 MRAD for elevation and 15.5 MRAD for windage. An external rotation indicator provides both visual and tactile reference of which rotation the turret is on. This pops out of the left side just below the elevation turret. You can easily feel this or spot it from behind the scope.

My review scope was fitted with the EBR-7D reticle design delineated in mils. Located in the first focal plane, this design sports a very fine center dot and hold points for elevation and windage/lead. The 3 and 9 o'clock center stadia each feature 10 mils which are broken down with .2 mil marks on top of the stadia and .5 mil marks on the bottom. The bottom portion of the reticle features a

The locking turrets are big, have tactile and audible .1 Mil adjustments, Zero Stop, a rotation indicator and are very easy to zero.

The turrets are also very easy to zero thanks to their L-Tec Zero System. You simply loosen one set screw in the upper portion of the turret. Then, you can adjust your zero using a dial on top of the turret. This system has all captive parts, the turrets do not pop off and you do not need three hands. It's a very easy to use system. The mechanism block mounted parallax knob adjusts smoothly and is marked from 10 yards out to Infinity. A rheostat for the illuminated reticle is also incorporated into this turret. To adjust, pull the outer knurled portion out away from the body. This will reveal 10 illumination settings with an OFF position between each one. The reticle is illuminated for use in low light scenarios.

windage tree with 10 mils for elevation holds. This section features dots instead of hash marks for windage holds. Smaller dots indicate .2 mils while the larger dots 1 mil. The lower portion of the reticle facilitates elevation and windage/lead holds along with fast corrections. One downside to first focal plane reticles is they tend to be very fine, and hard to see on lower magnification settings. Vortex's cross-plex illumination is intended to make the reticle easier to see at lower magnification settings by illuminating the main stadia.

Testing of this optic took place over a period of one year with the scope mounted on a number of rifles. It was used with a variety of calibers ranging from .22 LR up to .300 Winchester Magnum. Testing temperatures ranged from 0 to 116 degrees F. It was used for engaging targets out to 580 yards and for observing out to 1,500 yards in a wide variety of lighting conditions. Mounting the scope on a number of different rifles in different calibers gave me the opportunity to see just how user-friendly this optic is when it comes to zeroing.

A .22 LR allowed me to fire a large number of groups and check the scope's adjustments and tracking. Zero issues were encountered, the big Vortex tracks properly. I did quite a bit of shooting as the sun set and the light faded away to darkness. Here the Vortex impressed me with its light transmission. I was able to shoot some very good groups at distance in very low light by dialing the magnification back.

Submerging the scope underwater for 1 hour had no negative effect, and the Vortex shrugged off a steam bath as well. Temperatures of 0 degrees F were no issue mechanically. At the higher temps, especially with a hot barrel magnification needs to be dialed back due to mirage. It has been a while since I have shot groups from the bench using 36x magnification. Even cranked all the way up the image quality of the Vortex was surprisingly good. Frankly that is a whole lot of magnification to be stuffing through a 56mm objective, but the Vortex performs well. Back it off a bit and it really shines.

From a user's standpoint, it's a big and heavy optic. However, it also brings a whole lot of magnification to the table, with 36x on tap. It's a user friendly design with its big turrets, easy to read markings, and it zooms smoothly. All in all, it looks, feels and functions like a flagship optic. With an MSRP of $3,999 it should. The Vortex 6-36x56mm Razor HD Gen III is a workhorse of a scope which has become my favorite for accuracy testing. Marksman will always argue Chevy vs. Ford when it comes to high end optics, and prefer certain reticles and features but the Vortex 6-36x56mm Razor HD Gen III is definitely one to consider. FN

THE SILENT LEGION

MULTI-CALIBER KIT — ONE SIZE FITS ALL

And This Time It Is For Real!

The Silent Legion Multi-Caliber Kit comes with everything you need except a rifle and ammunition.

Usually, when I see “one size fits all” I’m prepared for disappointment. As someone who is not average sized, it usually means “force it on until it fits” which almost always means “it doesn’t fit.” Well, I’m here to tell you that Silent Legion doesn’t disappoint.

The Complete Multi-Caliber Kit covers the common rifle calibers, so you can have one can that quiets them all. And let’s save a lot of typing, and reading, and simply use the Silent Legion product code for this box ‘o wonderful; SL-MC. The MC comes with all the goodies you’ll need for 5.56, 6.8 Remington SPC, 7.62 NATO and .300 WinMag. That means the silencer itself, made out of Titanium, comes with a QD back plate, made to accept a two-lug QD mount. The QD back plate came already installed, and judging by the packaging, that’s the way they are shipped.

There are two QD mounts in the box, which are also flash hiders, and good ones at that. Some QD mounts are “flash hiders” but their real purpose is to act as the blast chamber, and don’t really work well at hiding flash. These do. And, work as part of the blast chamber as well. The two mounts are threaded 1/2x28 and 5/8x24, so you have two mounts ready to go for two rifles right out of the box. The two-lug mounting system is easy and straightforward.

As is the usual process, you remove your existing flash hider or thread protector, clean the threads, and screw the mount on. Use your flat shims to “clock” the mount so the two lugs are vertically oriented. (You do have flat shims, right? Never use a crush washer or other type washer. Never.) Check alignment, and if it is all correct, remove everything and then apply super Loctite or Rocksett and torque it back on. Silent Legion advises 35–45 in-lbs. Just as an aside, Silent legion included in the box a package with Loctite 262 in it. That’s the red stuff, and while it is really good for a lot of applications (and too good for some as well) if I'm heating things up the way I usually shoot, red isn't going to do it. So, set the 262 aside for other tasks, and use instead that tube of Rocksett you've got just for such occasions.

The two-lug QD mount comes marked as to thread pitch and makes getting a suppressor on your rifle really easy.

The rear cap has two clearance slots, one large and one small. No way to get the Silent Legion on incorrectly.

Once the spring has pushed the suppressor back on the mount, it is locked in place. Now have fun shooting.

To install your silencer once the mount has set, you simply slide the silencer over the mount, and align the wide slot on the rear cap with the wide lug on the mount. Then press it back all the way and give the silencer a counter-clockwise twist until it stops. Let go, and the internal spring will push the silencer into the machined recesses in the rear plate, and it is now held in place.

To remove, wait for it to cool (that's advice I'll only have to give you once, I hope) and then press the silencer back towards the chamber, rotate clockwise until it stops, then pull it straight forward off of the mount.

Yep, it's that easy.

Also in the box there are two extra rear caps, and these are direct-thread caps. Again, one is 1/2x28 and the other is 5/8x24, so all-told you can fit your SL-MC QD onto two rifles, and as many others as you have threaded, just as the box arrives to you. To swap the silencer to the direct-thread plates, you use the mount as a wrench. (All the more reason to have properly

You can see the two holes in the rear cap, and the Silent Legion wrench to use them to tighten the rear cap.

degreased your threads and used Rocksett in the installation.)

Here, instead of pressing the silencer all the way onto the mount until it bottoms out, simply hold it onto the mount to the point where the mount lugs fit into the machined recesses of the rear plate. Now use the barrel and mount as your wrench to unscrew the rear plate. Once free, you can take a moment to do some cleaning of those parts.

Now, hand-start the direct-thread plate of your choice into the rear of the silencer body, and then use the included two-prong wrench to fully tighten it. Yes, that's right, Silent Legion even includes the two-prong wrench for installation, and as a result they don't make you carry the rear plate in your pocket to the big-box tool store to find a two-prong set of pliers that would fit. (My guess, there isn't one.)

You could, depending on how many rifles you have that you want to put a silencer on, just leave the direct-thread mount on the barrel. Then, you simply unscrew the rear QD cap off, pull out the parts, and then thread the MC onto the already mounted direct-thread rear cap. If you have a bunch, then keep thread protectors on them, and put the direct thread rear cap into the silencer before mounting it.

Now, when it comes to suppressors for 5.56 and 7.62-specific applications, I've got plenty. But what I don't have are suppressors dedicated to the other calibers in the rack, like 6.8 Remington SPC, or 6.5 Grendel. The SL-MC lets me suppress those and not wrestle one off of a 7.62, since I have the two-lug QD mount and the direct-thread

Using our patented G-Core® Technology, we have created a lightweight, easily maintained, and unbelievably quiet package. The MIST-22® and MIST-22®TD barrels are a great way to keep your rifle compact without adding the extra length of a standard suppressor. Both barrels use a match grade 22LR chamber. They feature a 1-16" RH Twist for use with commercially available bull barrel stocks or specifically engineered for use with the Ruger® 10/22 Takedown® Rifle (Requires a .92" bull barrel style stock/forend for either model). The Silent Legion Multi-Caliber kit, and all the parts that come with it.

If you only have a few rifles, and not all will be suppressed, you can just leave the direct-thread rear cap installed on one, and then swap the silencer itself to the direct-thread adapter when you need it. If you have a bunch, then your options are greater, but so is your work keeping things sorted out.

to use. And other calibers? Well, if the silencer in question is rated as being capable for the 6.8 SPC, then I have to figure it will be just fine with a 6.5 Grendel. Ditto for other calibers lesser in muzzle blast oomph than the .300 WinMag, which means .30-06, .270, 6.5 Creedmoor, you get the idea. In fact, pretty much any centerfire rifle cartridge that hurls a jacketed bullet no larger than .308" in diameter, and uses a case no larger than a .300 WinMag would be fair game. Nothing with an all-lead or unjacketed bullet, because as a sealed unit there's no way to clean the gunk out of the MC, and such cartridges produce gunk in epic quantities. So no, not on your .22LR.

The silencer in the Multi-Caliber Kit appears to be the Silent Legion .30 QD suppressor, and I can't find fault with that as the starting choice. So, you get a top-notch suppressor made out of Titanium (and that accounts for the 16 ounces of weight, for a .30 silencer) and enough mounting hardware to put it onto two rifles with QD mounts, and as many others as you have correct muzzle threads for in direct-thread configuration.

If you want to have the QD option for other rifles as well, then extra mounts (either 1/2x28 or 5/8x24) can be had for just under a Benjamin each.

The curious among you will wonder; "A .30 silencer, on a 5.56 rifle, can't be doing much good. There's too much of a gap." You'd think so, but you'd be wrong. In my experience, a .30 silencer, installed on a 5.56 host, is going to deliver a suppression of sound that is maybe a decibel or two less than an otherwise identical can set up for 5.56. The problem in measuring such a setup/comparison is that there aren't any silencers that are absolutely identical in design and fabrication in both 5.56 and .30, except for the diameter of the bore down the middle. If we were really going to determine the difference, what we'd have to do is take a 5.56 suppressor that is the size of a .30 suppressor (and good luck there, most 5.56 silencers are smaller, because they can be) shoot it and measure it, then bore out the center to be .30 size, and then measure again.

Once you have forever altered a silencer, you'll find maybe (maybe) a 2 dB change. And you may not even have that much of a difference, as the internal volume in .30 silencers is often greater than that of 5.56. Again, nobody wants a honking big suppressor on their M4gery, so 5.56 silencers tend to be more compact than .30 ones are.

Guess what? The human ear is good for detecting a 3 dB difference at best, less if your hearing is already compromised, or if you aren't a musician. (And even some musicians can't tell, being more attuned to pitch and tone than volume.)

So, the short answer is: don't worry, be happy. Be happy that for the price of one excellent silencer, you can park it on a whole raft of rifles, both in QD and direct-thread form. And all this in one box. FN

THE PEDERSEN DEVICE

The Doughboy's "Secret" Weapon

Marching fire, also known as walking fire, is a military tactic—a form of suppressive fire used during an infantry assault or combined arms assault. Advancing units fire their weapons without stopping to aim, in an attempt to pin down enemy defenders. Marching fire usually ends with an infantry charge to engage the enemy in close combat. The tactic required ample ammunition and rapid-fire weapons. It differs from fire and movement in that the attacking force advances in unison rather than leapfrogging forward in alternating groups.

The French army first used marching fire during WWI at the Battles of Verdun and the Somme. They used mobile three (later four) man teams consisting of a gunner, a loader and ammo carrier who used the Fusil Mitrailleur Modèle 1915 ("Chauchat") automatic rifle to take out German machine gun nests.

When the U.S. entered the Great War, our army was almost bereft of machine guns forcing us to purchase large numbers of the Chauchat. American Doughboys quickly formed a low opinion of the French gun and were known to throw them away when they malfunctioned. But the American top brass was enamored with most things "French," one of which was the concept of marching fire and began training our soldiers to use the tactic.

Enter John Douglas Pedersen...

John D. Pedersen was born in Denmark, his family immigrated to the USA, settling in Wyoming. In 1907, Pedersen went to work for the Remington Arms Company as a consulting engineer and was instrumental in developing many of their between 1909 and 1944 received no fewer than sixty-eight patents.¹

But Pedersen's designs had one shortcoming: while they worked reliably, they tended to be overly complicated. A Remington engineer once confided in me that "Pedersen always used three parts where one would have sufficed."

Prior to the United States' entry into WWI, Pedersen developed a device to dramatically increase the firepower of the M1903 rifle by replacing the bolt with a device consisting of a complete firing mechanism and a small "barrel" for a new .30 caliber pistol like cartridge.

In effect, the "device" was essentially a complete blowback pistol minus a receiver-grip using the short rifled "barrel" on the front of the device to fit into the longer chamber of the M1903 rifle. The mechanism was fed by a detachable 40-round magazine which stuck out at a 45° angle from the top, left side of the receiver. The system required an ejection port to be cut into the left side of the rifle's receiver and the adjacent stock cut away to allow clearance for spent cartridges being ejected the action. The sear, trigger, and magazine cut-off also required modifications.

The device was to be carried in a stamped, sheet metal scabbard, and the rifle's bolt was to be contained in a canvas pouch when it was removed from the rifle. Five Pedersen Device magazines were carried in a five-cell canvas pouch. The metal scabbard and both canvas pouches were designed to be attached to the standard infantry cartridge belt. The device, complete with its carrying scabbard, weighed about two pounds, two ounces, and one fully loaded magazine weighed about one pound.

In use, the rifle's bolt was removed, and the device inserted into the receiver where it was secured by the magazine cutoff lever; a magazine was inserted, the bolt retracted, and the rifle fired in semiauto mode. Reportedly, the device could be inserted, or removed, from a M1903 rifle in 15 seconds and in no way prevented the rifle from being used as originally intended. Rifles thus modified were designated the U.S. Rifle, Caliber .30, Model 1903, Mark I.

In the opinion of many, the device's biggest shortcoming was the cartridge it fired: Cal. .30 Automatic Pistol Ball Cartridge Model of 1918. It consisted of a rimless, straight walled case 20mm in length topped with an 80-grain FMJ bullet that achieved a velocity of approximately 1,300 fps from the M1903's longer barrel. But, being it was not designed as a combat cartridge and a round that soldiers would "spray" large quantities of at the enemy, it was considered acceptable.

The Model 1903 Mark I rifle has an ejection port on the left receiver wall.

The Device was issued a metal scabbard, a five-cell canvas pouch for spare magazines and a larger pouch to hold the device when not in use. (Rock Island Auction Co.)

After a series of trials, again held in great secrecy in front of Army brass and members of Congress, the device was approved for issue.

After observing the trials, an army officer opined as to the device's (hopefully) effectiveness in marching fire "...a line of soldiers advancing across No Man's Land firing this device at the enemy trenches as they ran would make it extremely difficult for anyone in the trenches to show his head or any part of his body. Of course, fire while running or walking would not be so accurate, but the tremendous number of shots would more than make up for any inaccuracies and the whole enemy trench system would presumably be smothered with a storm of bullets."

It was also theorized that the Pedersen Device also would be useful as a defensive weapon by soldiers to repel a close quarters attack on their positions.

General Pershing requested 100,000 of the Devices and modified 1903 Mark I rifles for issue to American troops for use in the proposed massive Allied offensive planned for the Spring of 1919. The initial order was placed with Remington Arms Company on March 1918, again in great secrecy. To conceal the true purpose of the device from the Germans, it was designated as the Automatic Pistol, Caliber .30, Model of 1918.

As production and issue of Model 1917 "Enfield" rifles far exceeded that of the M1903, it was decided to design and manufacture a Pedersen Device for the weapon designated as the Automatic Pistol, Caliber .30, Model of 1918 Mark II. Few were ever produced before the war ended.² There were also plans to produce them for Tsarist Russia's obr. 1891g Mosin-Nagant, rifle but the ensuing Revolution put an end to those plans.

But all the secrecy came to naught when on November 11, 1918, an Armistice was signed between Germany and the Allies.

Production of devices continued until March 1919, when the contract was cancelled, after reportedly 65,001 devices and 65 million rounds of ammunition were produced which were all put into war reserve.

Post-war trials showed that the device and its accessories were cumbersome and heavy and its cartridge underpowered. Realizing that the device had no future in the Army in April of 1931, it was decided to scrap all of the Pedersen Devices. Only few hundred survived which today bring top dollar on the collector's market.

Full-Size AR-15 Ballistics
+ Compact Package
= AWESOME BUG-OUT BULLPUP!

By Jim Grant

When the engineers at Springfield Armory imported modified Croatian HS-2000 pistols under the new XD moniker more than two decades ago, many gun nerds — myself included — hoped they would bring additional Croatian military firearms into the states. Last year, our prayers were answered with the introduction of the Springfield Hellion — a civilian-legal version of the Croatian VHS-2 bullpup carbine.

While this gun was fantastic and critically acclaimed, it wasn't quite the exact same gun issued to the Croatian armed forces. Full-auto capability aside, it also featured a 16-inch barrel instead of the proper 18-inch one found on the VHS-2 and lacked the rifle-grenade-launching spigot. Springfield Armory responded once again with more of an original model this year, but they also brought in a new version featuring a 20-inch barrel. This got me very excited, as the 20-inch barrel offers more benefits than simply increased muzzle velocity.

However, you might think, “Isn’t the Croatian VHS-2 a relatively unproven design with almost zero combat experience?” Not true. Actually, Croatia provided somewhere between 30,000 and 100,000 VHS-2 rifles to Iraqi security forces and special operations forces in the wake of the War on Terror, with many seeing action in the counter-offensive against ISIS with great effect. And on a personal note, any rifle that can handle the punishing super-fine sand of the Iraqi desert and not grind to a halt is likely good to go. So, Let’s take a closer look at the new Springfield Hellion 20-inch and see if lightning can strike twice.

Springfield Hellion 20-inch Features

For starters, the Hellion is a semi-automatic version of the Croatian VHS-2. Like the VHS-2, the Springfield Hellion is a magazine-fed bullpup carbine that operates VIA a short-stroke piston-driven action. There’s much to cover, so let’s start with the muzzle and work back to ensure we don’t miss anything.

The Springfield Hellion ships with a 20-inch, chrome moly vanadium tapered barrel featuring a 1:7 twist rate. If you’ve never heard of chrome moly vanadium, it’s a term coined by the engineers at Colt that designates the use of 4150 steel with the addition of vanadium for corrosion and wear resistance.

The muzzle is capped with a four-prong flash-hider and is threaded to standard 1/2x28. So, shooters can install any standard AR-15 muzzle device like a compensator or sound suppressor.

Behind the muzzle device, the Hellion features a bayonet lug and a ribbed barrel section for attaching rifle grenades. While these grenades are nearly impossible to obtain state-side, the addition of the ribs is a nod to collectors and purists who want a near-perfect (at least ostensibly) facsimile of the real deal.

Speaking of which, if shooters want to mount a bayonet on the new Hellion, they’ll need a specific NATO-spec bayonet like the German Waffentechnik Model B2K offered on Springfield’s website. Interestingly, these German bayonets are made in the same town (and possibly by the

The Hellion gives shooters the ballistic efficacy of a full-sized AR-15 in a vastly more compact package.

The Hellion ships with a 30-round Magpul PMAG (where legal) and accepts all STANAG-pattern magazines.

Unlike nearly all bullpups, the Hellion includes an adjustable stock.

The Hellion's folding, non-reciprocating charging handle betrays its G36 heritage.

The new bullpup includes both an M-LOK handguard and adjustable gas system. Although somewhat unconventional, the result is a handguard that fills the support hand palm while giving better purchase to the fingers and thumb by letting them slightly wrap around the guard.

The last segment of the rifle's 20-inch barrel features a bayonet lug, a ribbed section for launching rifle grenades, and a 1/2x28 threaded muzzle topped with a multi-prong flash-hider.

same company) that made bayonets for Imperial Germany during the first World War.

Further back, just ahead of the polymer handguard, the new Springfield bullpup features an adjustable gas valve with two settings: "S" for suppressed and "N" for normal operation. The former restricts gas flow to compensate for the increased back pressure generated by attaching a sound suppressor.

However, in testing, I found that both settings ran flawlessly with my SilencerCo Hybrid 46M attached (SilencerCo.com). Truth be told, the only perceivable difference was the decrease in gas blowback to the shooter's face. While tolerable in the standard setting, it was all but eliminated in the suppressed setting.

Behind this, the Hellion features an excellent polymer handguard with M-LOK slots at the two-, ten-, and six o'clock positions. This might seem a little odd, but it's due to the fact that the side of the Hellion's handguards are slightly tapered inward in an almost tear-drop shape when viewed from the front.

The only downside to this configuration is that it prevents mounting oversized lasers like the Russian PERST-4 or the American L3 AN/PEQ-2 as they are blocked by the charging handle guard on top. So, if you have one and want to kit out your Hellion as a night-fighting carbine, you'll have to mount the device at the twelve- or six o'clock position. Not the end of the world, but certainly something to be aware of.

The new version of the Hellion features a much more ergonomic safety selector. (Utley, Grant)

Now above the handguard, the rifle ships with a full-length monolithic Picatinny rail for mounting optics. The rail is fully numbered for ease of re-mounting and incorporates fully adjustable, folding backup iron sights that lay flush when down. Despite being merely backup sights, these aperture-type sights are very usable. They feature five different elevation settings (with different-sized apertures), and they're built from some variety of ferrous material that I assume is steel and feature a rugged blued finish. One interesting fact about the sights is that they fold in different directions and are spring-loaded. So, a shooter needs only to press the two buttons adjacent to the sights, and they'll rapidly deploy in a locked position. This very well-thought-out design keeps the irons out of the way when not needed and instantly accessible.

Just below the front sight, the Hellion features a pair of ambidextrous sling loops constructed from heavy-duty blued steel anchored into the receiver.

Under the sights and integral rail is the first big clue about the Hellion's (and, by extension, the VHS-2) origins. A 12 o'clock, non-reciprocating, folding charging handle. If this looks familiar to my fellow gun nerds, it's because it bears more than a passing resemblance to the charging handle found on the Heckler and Koch G36 assault rifles. Which makes sense — the Hellion is essentially a bullpup Sights fold in different directions and are spring-loaded. Just press the two buttons adjacent to the sights, and they'll rapidly deploy in a locked position.

The front of the handguard features a QD sling mount.

The middle of the receiver below the rear sight also features a quick detach sling mount.

There's even a third QD mount at the very rear of the gun for traditional two-point sling carry.

The bolt release requires the shooter to pinch it together. While somewhat odd initially, becomes second nature quickly.

The pistol grip is more vertical than what is commonly found on AR-15s, and if it doesn't suite the shooter, they can replace it with any AR-15-pattern one.

G36 in my opinion. The VHS-2 even shipped with an integral optic like the German assault rifle. Sadly, these are thus far unavailable in the United States, but if the original G36 integral optic is anything to go by, $300 US-made optics put it to shame, so other than purists, we're not really missing out.

If you need further evidence, look at how the original VHS-2 utilized G36-pattern magazines. Thankfully, the Hellion does away with these in favor of the infinitely more affordable/common AR-15, STANAG-pattern magazines.

The magazine release is conveniently located at the rear of the magazine well.

Bullpup Ergonomics

One aspect of bullpup rifles that tends to turn shooters off to them as a whole is their ergonomics. Yes, the advantage of shortening the overall gun while making it more centrally balanced can't be overstated, but the controls and the way a shooter has to manipulate the gun can be extremely awkward. This is especially true with older designs like Steyr's AUG rifle, whose heavy trigger, combined with its oddly located magazine release, can make shooting the gun under pressure very difficult. Not to mention the fact that bullpups are notoriously challenging to reload when shooting from the prone position if you're unfamiliar with them, this is because they require the shooter to reach under their shooting arm to extract the spent magazine.

How does the Hellion address these fundamental bullpup issues? Well, to be honest, it doesn't — at least not totally. The trigger, especially on the new 20-inch barrel model, is one of the nicest I've ever felt on a bullpup. However, all the rearward controls, like the bolt release, are still fairly counter-intuitive, especially for shooters with extensive time on an AR-15.

The 20-inch Hellion (top) isn't much larger than the 16-inch original version.

Equipped with a variable magnification optic and a shorter, 20-round magazine, the Hellion is very comfortable to shoot from the prone position.

For the uninitiated, the bolt release is a button that runs parallel to the barrel. This button's housing is scalloped to provide a counter-pressure point for shooters to pinch the button to drop the bolt. It sounds bizarre, but after a few repetitions, it is easy enough to use. But I will admit, as someone with hundreds of hours behind an AUG and an IWI X95, I kept trying to mash a non-existent bolt release in my armpit. But again, with training, this will become second nature. Speaking of which, I've always felt that the fire selector on the AR-15 is very ergonomic. As far as I'm concerned, it's the gold standard for modern sporting rifles. It can be actuated with the firing hand without shifting or removing the grip and is very positive and thus easy to use in low-light conditions.

The original Hellion featured a similar style selector to the AR-15 but was at an awkward angle that made it very tricky to utilize without having to reposition the shooting hand. The new 20-inch Hellion has further refined the selector's geometry so that it is much lower and closer to the shooting hand. In my experience, this drastically increases the usability of the selector. As it no longer requires me to move my shooting hand's thumb to an almost vertical position to use. Instead, it feels much more natural while still staying out of the way when shooting. 10/10 Springfield, excellent job! Speaking about the shooting hand, the pistol grip is more vertical than what is commonly found on AR-15s, and if it doesn't suite the shooter, they can replace it with any AR-15-pattern one.

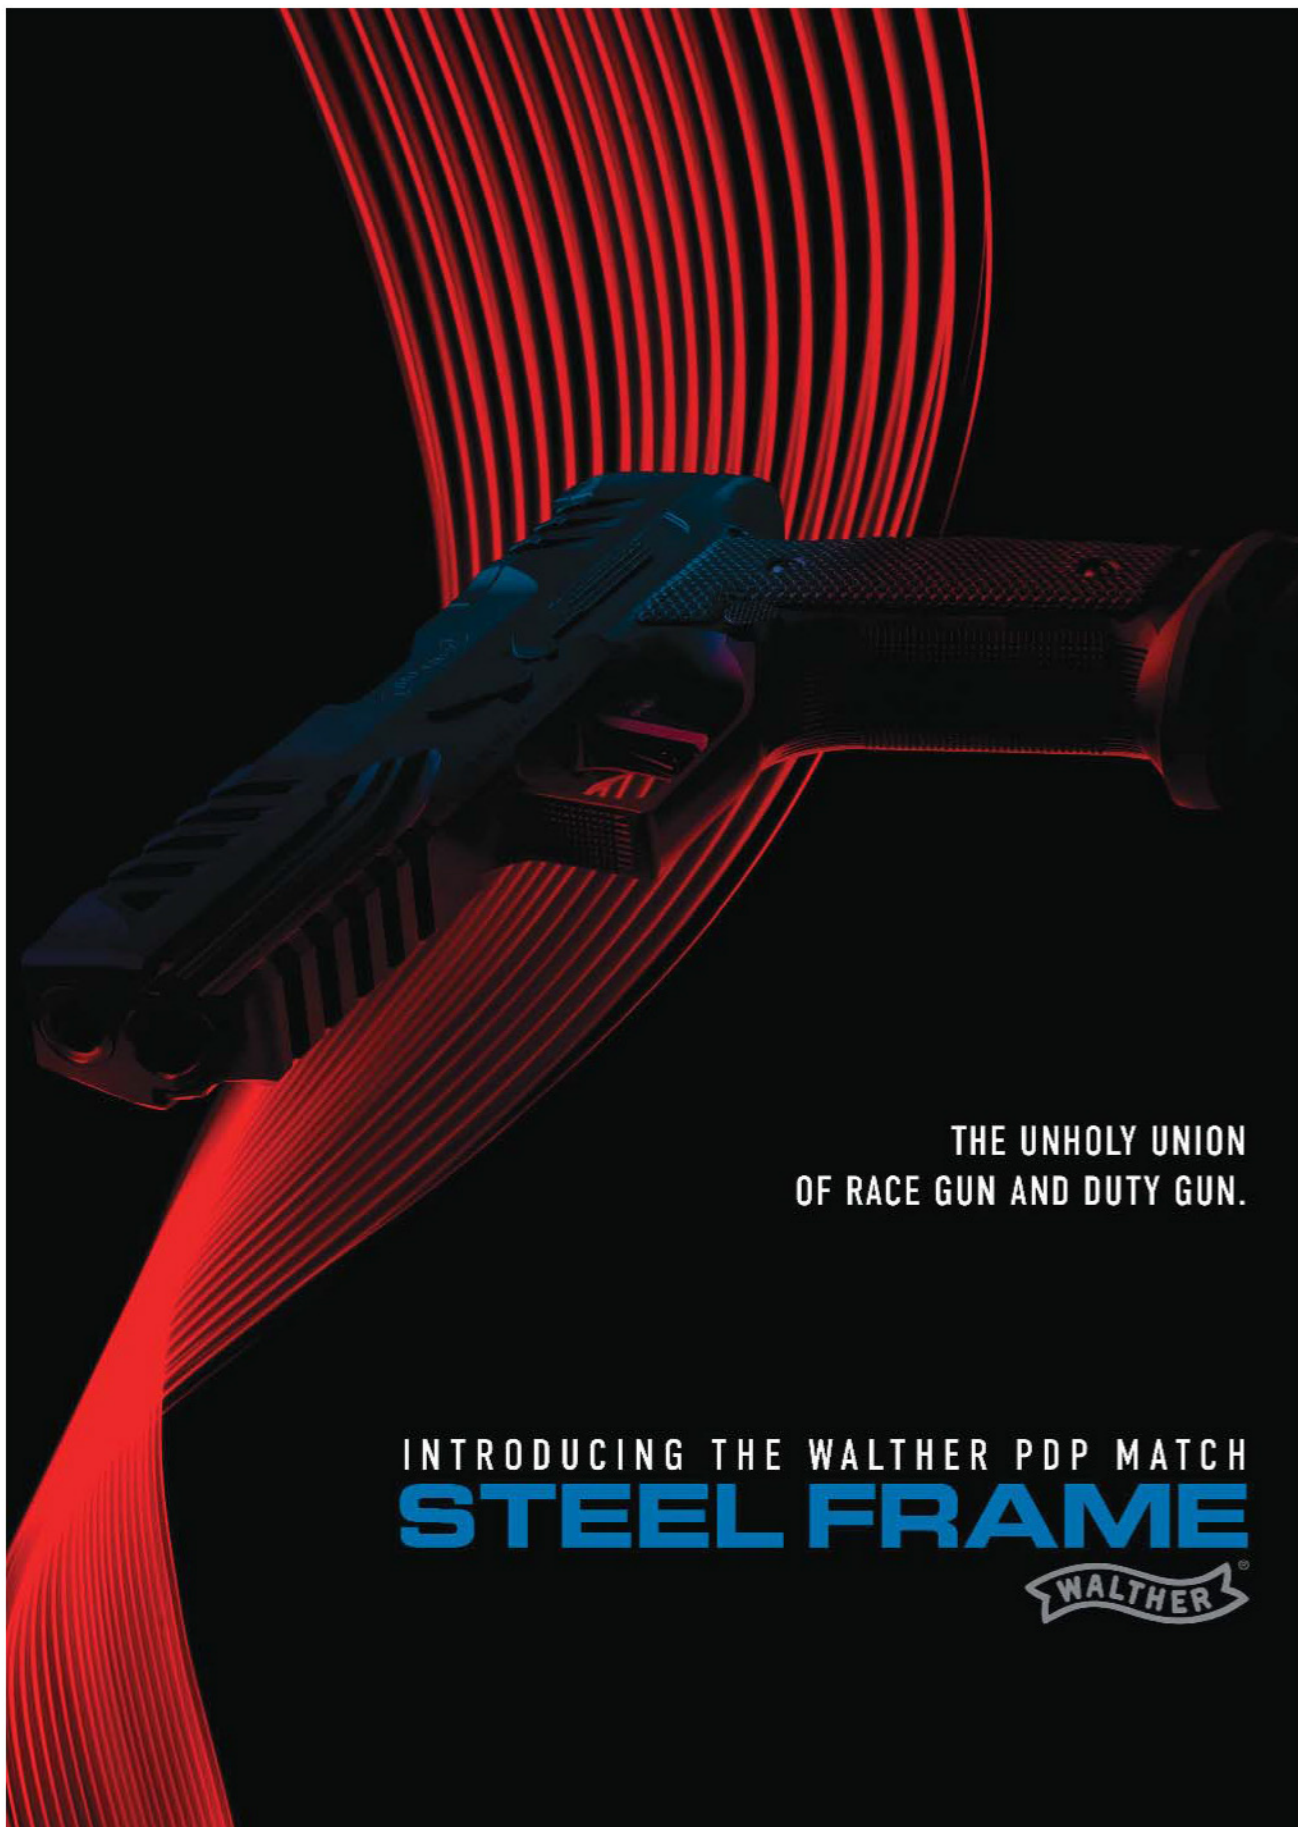

Performance

Here's where the rubber meets the road; What separates the groupies from the rock stars: performance. Despite what Instagram influencers might tell you, firearms are tools. And if they don't function reliably or in the capacity they were designed for, they are effectively worthless.

For reliability testing, the Hellion was fed four different types of 5.56mm ammunition from five different styles of magazines. Each magazine was loaded to capacity and fired first for accuracy from a Lyman Bag Jack rest mounted on a shooting bench. After rounds were chronographed and accuracy groups measured, the Hellion was rapid fired for 60 consecutive rounds before being allowed to cool for five minutes. After these five minutes, the next 60 rounds of ammo were fired quickly through the gun, and the weapon was inspected if any malfunctions occurred.

Five five-shot groups bench fired at 100 yards using a Lyman bag jack rest. Opic used was a Bushnell XTR II 525 5x-25x scope set at 10 power.

Also important to note is that the gun was not cleaned or oiled after an initial light oiling performed by the reviewer. Upon receipt of the Hellion, it was field-stripped and lightly oiled with synthetic motor oil to represent a worst-case scenario. One where, at the end of the world as we know it, specialized lubricants and quality ammunition are either gone or demanding a premium. With that said, how did the Hellion perform?

The last thing a would-be attacker sees as he tries to sneak up on you and your family in an EOTWAWKI situation.

In terms of reliability, the Hellion was flawless. For the review, I fired 240 rounds of almost NATO-spec 62gr Igmann 5.56mm, 260 rounds of 55gr Privi Partisan, 300 rounds of new production AAC (Meaning Palmetto State Armory) 62gr FMJ, 100 rounds of Federal 77gr Match King ammo, and 40 rounds of 77gr Match from SIG Performance Ammunition. In all that time, with no additional cleaning or lubricant other than off-brand clearance SAE-10W 30 from a big box store, the Hellion experienced no malfunctions whatsoever.

That's a whopping 940 rounds of mixed ammo through a downright filthy firearm without so much as a hiccup! If I had a bank account similar to an Eastern European Oligarch, I'd love to continue this test out to 5,000 or 10,000 rounds and see just how long until something breaks. For the time being, the new Hellion seems to be good to go.

But what about accuracy? After all, if the gun can't reliability hit its intended target, no level of reliability will make it worth its salt. I took the new 20-inch barreled version of the Springfield Hellion out to my good friend's farm so I could stretch its legs beyond the standard 100-yard target

A Classy- Looking

PISTOL CALIBER CARBINE
THAT'S ACTUALLY ALL NEW!

Text and Photos
by Oleg Volk

Will Henry's Basic Semi-Auto
Homesteader Rifle Work for Survival?

Until recently, Henry Repeating Arms produced an impressive array of manually-operated actions and a single rimfire semiauto evolved from a licensed design, the AR-7. The Homesteader 9mm carbine is their first foray into self-loading guns, and a rather ambitious one! Endowed with classic

Henry looks, it contains several technical innovations, some of them non-obvious. The first entry in the Pistol Caliber Carbine (PCC) category married modularity and high performance with the traditional look and feel, topped off with excellent accuracy and ergonomics. The 6.5-pound blowback design with fancy wood furniture follows the tradition of the Marlin Camp Carbine but on a whole new level of quality and durability. The stock is American walnut, with prominent grain, sealed finish against harsh weather, and pre-installed sling swivel studs.

The modular design gives options to fit many popular companion handgun magazines. The baseline magazine is a proprietary all-polymer straight box holding five or 10 rounds. Extremely lightweight and reliable, these magazines provide just enough capacity to fit every state's legal limit. They are also easy to load. The magazine release is a protected ribbed paddle just in front of the mag body. The five-rounder fits almost flush with the receiver, making for more comfortable handling. Whenever compatibility with handguns is needed, Henry offers Glock and SIG/M&P magazine wells also. Those have side release buttons, same as the eponymous handguns. Additional magazine wells only add $31 to MSRP. Swapping Ambidextrous magazine release, and the bolt handle swaps to either side of the receiver in seconds.

A detailed photograph of a Smith & Wesson Homesteader rifle, shown in its field-stripped state. The rifle is laid out on a plain white background. The main components visible are: the long barrel with a scope mounted on top; the receiver and trigger assembly; the wooden stock with a black rubberized buttplate; the magazine; and various small parts like the bolt, firing pin, and trigger guard. The text "Homesteader field-stripped." is printed in black to the right of the rifle.

A close-up photograph of the trigger guard and trigger mechanism of a Remington-Union Model 760 rifle. The trigger guard is made of dark, polished wood with a smooth finish. The trigger itself is a dark, polished metal with a serrated, ribbed texture for improved grip. A small, circular red dot is visible on the trigger's surface. The trigger is mounted on a metal plate that is part of the rifle's receiver. The background is a plain, light-colored surface.

How Do You Spell Pearl Necklace? F-R-E-E.

Experience the Luxury of Genuine Cultured Pearls ... FREE!

You read that right. If you'd like the Stauer genuine 26" cultured pearl necklace for FREE, all you need to do is call us today. There is no catch. This stunning, romantic necklace never goes out of style. In a world where some cultured pearl necklaces can cost thousands, we're offering ours for FREE.

Stauer has had a very good year and it's time for us to give back. That's why we're offering this stunning, 26" strand of genuine cultured white pearls for FREE! You pay only $24.95 for shipping & processing, our normal fee for a $295 necklace ... and we'll even pay you back with a $30 Discount Certificate — that's our BETTER THAN FREE Shipping!

Why would we do this? Because we are so sure that you will become a loyal Stauer client in the years to come. Recently, we encountered a magnificent cache of cultured freshwater pearls at the best price that I have ever seen. Our pearl dealer was stuck. A large foreign luxury department store cancelled a massive order at the last minute. In their stead we grabbed all of those gorgeous pearls. He sold us an enormous cache of his roundest, whitest, most iridescent cultured 6 1/2-7 1/2 mm pearls for pennies on the dollar. His loss is your gain.

Too good to pass up. Too good to last long. Genuine cultured freshwater pearls are a luxurious statement. Stauer finds a deal this outrageous once every few years. We have sold over 200,000 strands of pearls in the last several years and this is our finest value ever. There is only a limited quantity left in stock, so when they're gone, they're GONE! Call to reserve your FREE Cultured Pearl Necklace today and experience a brilliant new definition of price-less luxury!

U.S. M1 Bazooka Kit non firing

This kit provides you the essential parts to create a non-firing reproduction WW2 U.S. Bazooka. You will need some skills to tack weld metal or provide the kit to someone with tack welding skills to assemble for you. Kit does not include common wood and metal screws nor the light bulb and a few parts will need holes drilled, but ultimately you will save a bundle by assembling these parts yourself! For 2022, we have modified the kit with a trap door on the bottom of the wood stock and an inlet for a light bulb used as a circuit test on the original Bazooka. The 54" tube and metal parts are steel, and the grips and stock are hardwood. A diagram with distances for placement of parts is provided. All parts are newly made for this kit. $255, #MISC503-KIT (because of size, this item does not qualify for free shipping)

Most States allow large capacity magazines. Some do not. If you are unsure on this issue, contact your Local or State law enforcement to confirm what is allowed. This is a partial list of States with some hi-capacity restrictions: NJ, NY, MA, MD, IL, KS, CO, CT, IL and various county laws therein including Chicago, D.C. CA residents - check your laws as they are changing.

A lightweight bolt is attached to a reciprocating weight in the forend with action bars similar to what you would find in a pump shotgun. That way, the receiver can be shorter, the space inside the forend is put to use, and the muzzle rise is negated by the weight moving forward at the end of the cycle. Depending on the distance from the target, two to four rounds per second is possible with complete control of the aim.

Now to the sights. The rifle comes with a sturdy front sight post without illumination of any kind, complemented by a ghost ring rear sight dovetailed at the back to the barrel. The rear sight has elevation and windage adjustments: windage is by loosening and tightening of two screws, elevation is by rotation of the threaded aperture. In keeping with the traditional hunting look, the front sight blade has no protective wings. While the rear sight can be placed on the back of the receiver, it would require a taller front sight to zero correctly.

An aftermarket front sight would increase the sight radius considerably, but Skinner Sights already offers a Picatinny rail with an integrated peep sight placed lower than the factory part, allowing the long sight radius without changing the front.

The muzzle is threaded the usual 1/2x28. No flash hider or brake is necessary, but a linear compensator or a sound suppressor would both reduce the already mild report even further.

The rifle has been unfailingly reliable, suppressed and unsuppressed. With a sound suppressor, very little gas blowback occurred until the heaviest bullets were used. Homesteader cycled everything from 65-grain to 147-grain subsonic ammunition and runs 100% reliably with a sound suppressor, but I've had a few short cycles without a can when using longer aftermarket magazines. With lighter-weight bullets, felt recoil is reduced to levels below a typical rimfire rifle. The soft, springy rubber buttpad attenuates what little recoil impulse exists.

Accuracy with iron sights and red dot is similar, but the red dot is a little faster. I kept getting inconsistent results, so I enlisted the famous science fiction writer Michael Z. Williamson, a far better marksman than I, to help. I found out that the Weaver rail kept loosening despite blue Loctite until I turned the screws a little harder than seemed reasonable. Once the rail was secured, having a second marksman to check my results gave me a ranking of numerous loads for accuracy.

Look at the chart for details, but the overall conclusion is that the carbine's preferred loads are in the 92- to 124-grain range. I found no real difference between ball and hollow points, but everything in that weight range grouped two to 2.5 inches at 50 yards. The 147-grain subsonics, no matter what bullet style or construction, shot much looser. Four to six-inch elongated groups were typical, and most 147-grain JHPs did not feed 100% reliably either, with two to three failures per magazine when fired unsuppressed. However, 147-grain ball ammo fed and cycled fine. The good news is that 147-grain JHPs work reliably once the rifle has additional backpressure from a sound suppressor, which is the whole point behind subsonic 9mm. The cheapest and simplest 115-grain FMJ and JHP were the best performers, including a budget Sellier & Bellot JHP that consistently shot two inches at 50 yards. Super light G2 Telos frangible copper hollow point speed up to about 1,700 fps from the longer barrel and would work very well on coyotes and similar size varmints. ARX 65-grain frangible ammunition also worked reliably, grouping around three inches at 50 yards. With the muzzle velocity of just shy of 2,000 fps, they work well as short to medium range varmint rounds.

► Excellent terminal performance thanks to the longer barrel.

The traditional-looking Henry Homesteader can “bug out” in the 21st century.

Regular 9mm loads speed up nicely in the 16.4-inch barrel, gaining 100–200 fps over handgun barrels. I would estimate the effective range to be 150 yards. Ammunition hand loaded with slower powders would up the velocity up to 300 fps, extending effective range another 50 yards. The four advantages of pistol caliber carbine; greater kinetic energy, flatter trajectory, improved accuracy, and faster effective rate of fire are fully realized in the Homesteader. Federal Punch 124-grain JHP at close distance expanded to .60 caliber and penetrated 14.5 inches in gel, a very credible performance for home defense.

Hornady Critical Defense 135-grain projectiles expanded “only” to .51 caliber but penetrated 17.5 inches in gel, reasonable numbers for bringing down modestly sized Tennessee deer. At the same time, it doesn’t stand out to the eye as a modern black rifle, a major advantage in unfriendly jurisdictions. Another advantage is a much quieter report than from a full-power rifle, especially if subsonic ammunition is employed: it’s easier on your ears and, in a survival situation, doesn’t broadcast your location and actions quite as far. Coming from Henry Repeating Arms, it is backed by an excellent warranty and service. Not surprisingly, this model instantly became a bestseller, especially among the brand fans.

While other PPC options exist, this one combines excellent performance with the traditional Henry look and feel. It’s equally at home in a hunting camp, ringing steel at the range, or laying down short-range cover fire in a post-apocalyptic scenario. Homesteader might look fuddy, but it works fine with 33-round stick and 50-round drum magazines. FN

When carried or stored, we want a firearm to be as compact as possible. This usually requires a compromise of one kind or another. A shorter barrel, or a (gack!) bullpup design. Trailblazer has a different idea. The Pivot does just that: the top half rotates around to un-compact the carbine, and ends up being a usable size with a non-SBR barrel length. This does, however, require other compromises. But we'll get to those.

The Pivot is a 9mm carbine with a blowback system, feeding from Glock magazines. The upper receiver is an aluminum shell with a partial rail on top. Partial in that there are sections out front and at the rear, in case you want to mount back-up sights on it. The rear rail is long enough to park a red-dot optic or even a low-power magnifying scope, should you wish to. The barrel, at sixteen inches, is threaded at the muzzle for a muzzle brake or to install a suppressor mount.

The upper has an ejection port on the right side, and the charging handle is a near-vertical knurled steel rod that locks open not unlike the charging handle of an MP5.

The lower is also aluminum, with polymer parts attached to it. It is the firearm, with the serial number stamped in an inset plate on the right-hand side, ahead of the stock latch. The safety and magazine release are both ambi, present on both sides, and while the safety lever looks a bit on the small side it is entirely useable.

The stock is adjustable for length of pull, with three inches of travel. I found it at the full extension still a bit on the short side, but hey, we want compact, we've got to take compact, right? And not all shooters have a seven-foot wing-

A Twist on Compact Pistol Caliber Carbines

The Pivot has a bit of jolt to the recoil, due to the heavy bolt, but it is not at all a problem.

span as I do. The stock also has a magazine holder, which is necessary to keep the magazine handy, which we'll get to in a moment. I have to mention that in some jurisdictions, a loaded magazine in the same case as, or in contact with the firearm, constitutes a loaded firearm. (That's the sort of thing only a legislator or Judge who is utterly ignorant of firearms could say with a straight face. But I digress.)

The pistol grip is located in the middle of the Pivot when folded. (Folded? Pivoted? Rotated? Collapsed? We've got to find a better term.) The upper and lower receivers are the same length with the stock collapsed, so the Pivot as a package is compact and lacks protrusions. The stock, with magazine inserted, does stick a smidge below the pistol grip, but that is unavoidable. The pistol grip is relatively short, so it will work with G19 magazines, and anything longer. The stock is as compact as it can be and still be a stock. In-between the pistol grip and stock is the stock latch, which you use to unlock and extend or collapse the stock length of pull.

Both upper and lower have M-LOK slots, so should you feel the need to clutter up the clean lines of the Pivot by attaching a light, laser, cup holder or other extra, you've got places and choices. Me, I would be tempted to find a place to put a light, but only if I could do so and keep the clean lines intact. That would mean locating it underneath the lower receiver, where it would be out of the way and not add thickness to the sleek, flat contours of the Pivot.

You will notice that when the Pivot is rotated closed, the muzzle is pointing back, more or less in your direction. That is a bit disconcerting at first, but you get over it. The

TRAILBLAZER PIVOT

The Trailblazer Pivot, rotated to its compact storage size.

◀ To unlock the Pivot and open it up, you press the button on the front of the lower receiver.

The Pivot does just that, it pivots open or closed.

Pivot is so compact, and so lacking in protrusions it almost seems a shame to put sights on it, but you have to have sights. So, the most compact red-dot you can afford would be a suitable companion to the Pivot.

Ok, you have the Pivot in your hands, with a loaded magazine in the stock, and the bolt locked back. Slide your support hand up to the front of the receiver set, and you'll notice a button on the lower receiver. Press this, and it unlocks the receivers. Now simply rotate (a slap or swipe of your support hand will do the job) and the upper will rotate around. Once it gets through its full 180 degree rotation, it will automatically lock in place. You have to make sure you get it there, there is no mechanical assist to complete rotation, but it isn't difficult to manage. You can rotate the upper in either direction, the Pivot doesn't care. Once you have the latch pressed, swinging the upper around is easy. Now, pull the magazine out of the stock, or off your belt, slam it home, and then slap the bolt handle to close and you are ready. Press the safety lever down, and when you press the trigger it fires like any other PCC.

The Pivot comes with a fifteen-round magazine (ten rounds in the un-free states) but it will use any Glock 9mm magazine of the G17 size, and of the ambi-mag catch generation. (I didn't try it with any of my ancient legacy

The Pivot, open and ready to be loaded.

The ejection port is on the right side, and the charging handle is on top, producing a pretty flat package.

Glock mags.) So, while you have fifteen rounds stashed in the stock, you can use any other size you want, off your belt or out of your ready bag.

Now, the downsides, or compromises. First, you have to have the bolt locked back with the hammer cocked to pivot it, and second, you have to have the magazine out. These are both an unavoidable detail of the design. You have to have the bolt back, otherwise it would not pass over the hammer. The hammer needing to be cocked should be obvious. And the magazine presents the same obstacle: if it were in the mag well, the feed lips would be above the top line of the lower receiver, and prevent rotation. These “drawbacks” are also safety provisions: since you can’t have a loaded magazine in the pistol grip, and you have to have the bolt back, there’s no way you can have a chambered round in it while you are rotating it. If you properly follow the manual of arms as laid out, you are good to go.

To rotate the Pivot closed, remove the magazine. Pull back the charging handle and rotate it up to the locked position. Check the chamber, just to be sure. Then press the locking button on the front of the lower receiver, and then rotate the upper around to closed position. Again, you can rotate in either direction.

In test-firing, the Pivot worked like a champ, but the heavy bolt was clearly doing its job on each shot. However, the Pivot is again not the PCC you’d pull out of the rack with the intention of winning a competition. Instead, it would ride in the bag behind the seat of your car or truck, or be tucked into a gear bag, as an unobtrusive emergency tool. In that, it would excel. Also, the mass of the bolt

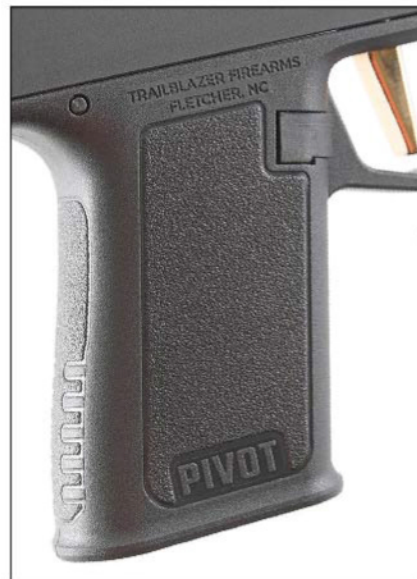

The Pivot has M-LOK slots, to mount accessories if you wish. You can see the partial rail on top, there for a front sight or light if you wish one.

The muzzle is threaded and comes with a thread protector.

The safety lever is recessed but usable, and ambidextrous, so it works for everyone.

The pistol grip is textured, but does not have a magazine well flare, or replaceable backstraps.

and guide shaft add to reliable function. Cold, dirt, or other problems are things a bolt with mass simply shrugs off. With a folded length of just twenty inches it would disappear in a medium-sized duffel bag. A medium-sized messenger bag would also work well. 9mm isn't the hammer of Thor as far as power goes, but when you have an emergency need of a firearm, 9mm is better than harsh words, a sharp stick or a big knife.

The trigger is, again, not what you'd choose to win a match. But it is clean and is heavy enough to keep you out of trouble in times of stress, and it did not pose a hindrance to hammering the 100 yard gongs at the club's rifle range.

Disassembly? Do not try to figure it out on your own, read the manual that comes with the Pivot. It involves using a punch to press a recessed rod in the back receiver plate, and you won't figure it out just by pushing things.

Yes, the rotational design is unique, and eye-catching, but in all other regards, Trailblazer has hit the right marks. Opting for 9mm is the smart choice. Yes, .45 ACP has more power, and a couple of club members I showed it to were hot to get one in 10mm if Trailblazer ever made one. However, for someone preparing for troubled times, the most common ammunition to be found behind .22LR is 9mm. So kudos, Trailblazer. Ditto for using Glock magazines, especially down to G19 size. Were Glock magazines any more common you could buy them at the local 7-Eleven or gas station with a discount for filling-up your tank. Double-good if your sidearm is a 9mm Glock or a Glock clone. And coming out of the box lacking sights is another smart step. Everyone out there has their own favorite

The disassembly start involves a rod and the rear plate of the receiver.

Apart and ready for maintenance. Do not try to figure it out, read the manual.

The pistol grip is short, so it works with G19-sized magazines. And any longer magazines as well.

The stock is also a magazine storage space as well, with room for a 15-shot magazine.

The advertisement features a collection of paintball markers and a Gatling gun. In the top left, there are two markers on tripods. In the top right, a marker is mounted on a small vehicle. In the center, a large Gatling gun is shown with a belt of ammunition. In the bottom right, there is a small silhouette of a person in tactical gear. The background is dark with a subtle grid pattern.

These are the kinds of groups I was able to shoot at 50 yards with the Pivot and a 1X red-dot, in this case an EOTech Holosight.

red-dot, optic or iron sights. Anything they included would find probably 75% of the buyers grumbling as they took them off to replace them.

The muzzle being threaded for the standard 9mm size; 1/2x28, means you can install pretty much anything you want, or nothing at all. Leave it alone with the provided thread protector or put on a muzzle brake, or a suppressor QD mount, and it won't add too much extra length to the pivoted package.

As an emergency tool, it is quick out of the bag, unfolded and ready to go. As an auxiliary tool to hand to someone in your party who is otherwise unarmed (Who invited that guy?) it is equally easy. You can snatch it out and unfold it before they know what is going on, and from there it is just like any other 9mm carbine: magazine in the pistol grip, work the charging handle, and put sights on-target as-needed.

In testing the Pivot, I grabbed an EOTech sight off the shelf, bolted it on, got it zeroed, and went to work. The chrono session was as-expected, with the sixteen-inch barrel giving the loads tested a bit of a boost over what a pistol would do. The Pivot proved quite accurate, and on that day I was able to post some impressive groups from the bench at 50 yards. Yes, I had fun ringing the 100 yard gong, but to really test accuracy out there I'd need a magnifying optic. That is just too much for such a compact and handy carbine, and the Pivot is more of an up-close-and-personal emergency tool anyway.

As an emergency firearm to pack on travel, or to have handy to hand to someone who needs one, a compact red-dot optic would be better. Were I setting this up for that use, I'd go with something more compact than the EOTech, such as an Aimpoint, a Holosun or Crimson Trace.

The last detail to consider is the cost. At the list price, it is not out of bounds with a well-made 9mm based on the AR-15. A slick AR-based 9mm is going to cost as much, or more than the Pivot, and the AR won't fold. You can get other carbines, even some few that fold, for less, but none as easy to use, slick or compact as the Pivot. You can make an AR in 9mm as small as this, by taking the two receivers apart. But who wants to be assembling a rifle under stress, when seconds count? So pivot to the solution: Trailblazer Pivot. TW

With a low-profile messenger bag or something like it, the fact that you are armed in case of problems won't be apparent to observers.

The B&T APC223 isn't for those on a budget, but well-to-do preppers, who marvel over Swiss quality, may find it to be their go-to survival rifle.

THE B&T APC223 PRO RIFLE

Runs Like a Swiss
Watch, Only louder.

Text and Photos by Oleg Volk

Brügger & Thomet started out in 1991 in Thun, Switzerland as a sound suppressor manufacturer. In 2004, they started producing firearms. For a modestly sized company, well under a hundred employees, B&T produces an impressive variety of iconic small arms including submachine guns, bolt action and semiautomatic rifles, an integrally suppressed bolt action pistol, grenade launchers, as well as parts for other gun makers. Some of the designs are evolutions of older models, like Steyr TMP and Welrod, while others are largely original. Based in a very expensive country and manufacturing high quality arms, B&T asks a premium for its wares and usually gets it. Having worked with a Czech Bren 805 and FN SCAR, I got curious about an outwardly similar B&T APC223, a 5.56mm short-stroke pistol carbine aimed at the same military and police users as the other two. Expensive equipment can be either pro gear with maximized functionality or Veblen goods, where the excessive price itself bestows the cachet upon the purchase. Which of these is the APC223, the ultimate tool for the price, or a status symbol?

Is It Just Pretty, or Is It Also Highly Competent?

APC223 is available in the US in three forms: as a PDW with a 10.2-inch barrel length, a carbine with a 12.5-inch barrel, and a rifle model with a 16.5-inch barrel. I opted for the latter, as the cartridge benefits from the longer barrel for muzzle velocity and reduced blast, not to mention being a non-NFA item. The rifle came with a NATO spec flash hider threaded for B&T sound suppressors.

A look at the furniture. For shooting off-hand, 12.5-inch barrel with the correspondingly shorter forend would have balanced slightly better but, for any kind of APC223 rifle with Aimpoint M5 red dot sight.

All controls are duplicated on both sides.

supported shooting, the longer barrel and forend are a clear win. The rifle is massively modular, with at least four stock options available. The same stocks may be used for rifles as for some of the submachine guns. The mostly-polymer lower receiver is not the regulated part in the US, rather it's the extruded aluminum upper with steel inserts. It attaches to the upper with two captive pins. Pistol grips are of a standard AR-15 pattern. At 7.7 pounds unloaded, the APC223 is a little heavier than a comparable AR-15 — both use the same magazines, but that's where the similarities end.

APC223 uses a short stroke gas pistol action, with a convenient tool-less gas regulator for normal use, adverse conditions, and suppressed use. The positions are marked in millimeters of gas port diameter, 1.4, 1.5, and 1.0.

In addition to the standard recoil spring, the rifle uses a short hydraulic buffer in the buttstock extension. The extension fits in the receiver, enabling full functionality even with the stock folded to the right for transport. After seeing the stock in the stowed position, I understood why the cheek rest slants a little: that way, the folded stock clears the ejection port. The combination of spring and hydraulics gives this rifle recoil impulse comparable to a 10/22 rimfire.

The rifle came with two lowers, one with the standard curved two-stage trigger, another with a straight single-stage Elfmann target trigger. The curved trigger (standard) breaks at five pounds, the straight one around 4.3 pounds (adjustable from 2.5 to 4.5 lbs.) but feels lighter thanks to being very crisp.

Charging handles are folding flappers on both sides of the upper receiver. They do not reciprocate during firing but attach to a common internal carrier so both reciprocate when one is pulled manually. They can be activated by pushing against some fixed object, but only if the optic does not protrude to the side directly above them. I found that either handle worked well for loading the rifle, but the left side control was preferable for unloading: the right hand partly obscures the ejection port during the operation.

The long B&T flash hider proved very effective.

Mix and match stocks and lowers at will.

The lower is very light and reinforced with metal only in key spots.

The rifle can be fired with the stock folded.

Other controls are also duplicated. The magazine release is the typical button forward and above the trigger guard, the bolt release also looks like a button but is actually a downward slider. The safety is a paddle with a 30-degree throw, short and narrow enough not to impinge on the thumb on the off-side, but long and wide enough for easy leverage. It is strongly and audibly detected. Ribbed safety lever also works as a "paddle" or resting surface for the thumb.

The unlock button for the stock is very similar to SIG 550 design and in my opinion the best in the industry. It's easy to operate but won't unlatch by accident. I've tried two stocks, a fixed skeletonized model and the more adjustable MBT. The fixed model looks more martial, has a plain ribbed plastic buttplate and is the stock to use with body armor. The MBT is adjustable for length with five positions, and for cheek rise, three positions. The riser is easy to adjust with one hand. Adjusting the length is a bit tricky as the release buttons are on both sides of the non-moving part of the stock. To extend, or collapse, you have to pinch them while pulling or pushing on the buttstock with another hand or some object. It's an awkward design saved by being configurable and comfortable, with a thick rubber buttpad. Both stocks have small latches for metal sling hooks, the MBT also has QD sockets. The forend doesn't have sockets, but one is easy to add using MLOK or Picatinny interface.

Gas adjustment is extremely simple. A punch or a bullet nose is needed to remove the gas regulator, but adjustments are tool-free.

You might want to wear a glove if the regulator has to be switched to a larger port opening due to heavy fouling from high-volume shooting. Out of curiosity, I wrapped a paper towel around the forend and fired: some rifles blow soot at the support hand but not APC223. What little gas comes out of the regulator is directed forward over the muzzle. In general, this gun runs quite cleanly and stays cooler than a comparably configured AR-15. It also helps that the charging handle track is separate from the ejection port, and so doesn't require cuts in the receiver behind the bolt which would have let dirt in near the bolt. Since there's no left-side opening near the chamber, gas blowback, what little there is of it, is isolated away from the shooter's face. Ejection intensity is quite underwhelming for shooters used to AR and AK vigor — brass arcs out slower and goes a foot or so to the right. This is the result of a generally slower cycle duration, with cyclic rate around 550 rpm for APC556, the fully-automatic rifle version of APC223.

The rotating multi-lug bolt and carrier are broadly similar to the AR-15. The ejector is a spring-loaded plunger. The entire assembly stays much cleaner though, thanks to the piston action.

While the stocks are set up to allow fairly low optics, this gun can be used with AR-15-height fixed mounts. Picatinny rail sits about 1.75" above the bore line, compared to AR-15 at 1.25": it's better to use medium rings rather than tall. The fixed stock works well with mini red dots and low-mounted scopes, while MBT stock gives the option of a comfortable sight picture with tall rings and fixed mount optics as well. B&T even offers a dip-down stock for shooting in a gas mask without having to resort to ridiculously tall scope risers. If I was running this rifle for defense, Aimpoint M5 red dot or similar would be my first choice.

On the Range

For testing accuracy and hunting, low-profile, variable-optic (LPVO) rifle scopes like the Vortex 1-6x give more options. Due to very generous eye relief of Vortex Razor HD, I put it far enough forward to bias the balance of the rifle toward the muzzle. That works great for supported firing but I would need more gym time to make this comfortable off-hand. In my opinion, a smaller 1-4x LPVO would make a better fighting optic for APC223. That said, the combination of the extra-clear Razor HD, the extra-crisp trigger, and the barely-extant recoil made this combination so easy to shoot that it was almost transparent to the user. In essence, I would look at a target, bring up the rifle and “clang” went head-size steel at 100 yards. The process conspicuously lacked a conscious effort of controlling the trigger or any anticipation of the shot.

The highly adjustable MBT stock.

Hornady in second place at 1.10 inches.

SIG Elite Performance came in at 1.55 inches for its top group.

The hydraulic recoil dampener, combined with habits formed with over gassed AR-15- and AK-type guns, played a bit of a joke on me. When firing from a front sandbag, I used a looser hold on the gun than necessary, resulting in multiple accidental doubles as the entire rifle bounced forward. A second hit that's several inches above the first one was of no use to me, so I switched to a more controlled hold and a tighter shoulder contact with the buttplate, which stopped double-taps.

I also discovered that the crosshairs of a 6x optic almost completely cover up one-inch target circles, requiring a switch to two-inch stickers. That adjustment out of the way, I learned that accuracy definitely depends on the ammunition in use, and heavier match loads are more consistent than ball. M855 Wolf ball spread averaged a fraction over three inches at 100 yards, 77-grain Norma match is pretty much MOA-accurate, except when I don't do my part. 68-grain OTM Hornady

It's Going to the Dogs, What Can I Do?

Yes, our good ol country is going to the dogs. Maybe, some of you think (I can't argue it) "already gone to the dogs..."

It should concern you.

Maybe even enough for you to bestir yourself, and ask an important question: What should I be doing about it?

Because you MUST do something. Anything else is cowardice, right? "Refusal to fight" is not something to be proud of. Neither is giving up before you make an effort, because "it's too late, Fred".

Shameful. Do you still have, unlike most of our modern Americans, a concept of "shame"?

Think of those starving soldiers freezing at Valley Forge. What would they make of you as you lay there on the couch, all nice and warm, with a full belly, pontificating about "it's too late".

I'll tell you what they'd think: "Let's go home; there's no use spilling our blood for our useless descendants...they're not worth my little fingernail." Chokes you up with pride, right?

Believe it or not, the answer to "what can I do" can be easy:

Consider: The great Founders of this nation repeatedly said liberty was safe on this continent so long as the American people were educated and alert.

Is there anyone reading this right now who believes the American people are "educated"?

Yes, they know all about "diversity" and many can name all 57 genders. But does that make them "educated"?

And how about "alert"? I believe the founders intended being "alert" to dangers to our constitutional system of government or, more simply, to liberty.

Yet we currently live in an upside-down world where the ones parroting about the "danger to democracy" are the very ones intent on tearing it down.

I would think it easy to get someone to "alert" status, understanding you need to be alert to the real threat.

Obvious, because once you get someone "educated", the dangers facing this country today are so obvious the educated person will instantly become alert to the threats.

So education leads to hearing the alarm bells, and education is therefore the important first step for a person. It's the "educated" part that takes on the current flood of ignorance, apathy, and laziness in which the country is drowning. So, it's important to know what "educated" means.

I suggest it's an understanding about what this country is all about. An understanding of why, when the Treaty of Paris ending the Rev War was signed, there were suddenly 3 million brand-new sovereign citizens on a planet where before there were only a few dozen — all kings.

The fastest way to educate someone is to tell them the story of April 19th, 1775. Not the story no longer taught in school, but the real history of men and women who rose up on that day long ago and took on the world's mightiest empire with single-shot smoothbore muzzle-loading firearms — and kept at it for 8 long bloody years, until that magic day they — each and every one of them - became sovereign citizens. No longer subjects of the crown.

Telling this story is a key component of Project Appleseed, which is why you should attend one, and bring everyone you can with you — friends, neighbors, relatives, co-workers — the whole works!

Stay tuned for "What can I do?" Part 2.

Meantime, get your shooting skills up to speed by ordering our "Fred's Guide to Becoming a Rifleman". Order two sets: 1. To meet our minimum order of $75 2. So you can gift one to a friend, relative, co-worker, or neighbor. You DON'T want to be the ONLY Rifleman on your street....

ally cost only 2/3 as much. Compared to CZ Bren 805, it's half-pound lighter and feels more refined, also displays better accuracy. They have similar features and level of support. The fit and finish on the APC223 is consistent with the Swiss reputation for quality. All three of these options cost much more than a typical AR-15, but not much more than a top-tier AR of comparable quality. Getting this rifle is a similar action to buying higher grade body armor: the nominal rating may be similar, but the comfort is greatly increased.

Frontier averaged slightly over 1.5", and Steinel 77-grain Match just about tied with SIG load of the same weight at 1.58" and 1.67" group averages respectively. Since 77-grain OTM bullets have respectable terminal performance, they would be my first choice for the bugout load. The ergonomics and the trigger make it easy to shoot APC223 to its full capability even under non-ideal conditions even for a mediocre marksman like me. I would have got slightly tighter groups with a higher-powered scope, but LPVO is more like what would be used on this rifle in a survival situation when hunting and self-defense are equally likely.

Conclusion

Compared to a SCAR, it feels better in the hand and seems to have less gas blowback. B&T's silencer background shows in how well this rifle is adapted for sound-suppressed use. While SCAR parts are easier to find, B&T barrels actuand minuses. The pluses are the minimal recoil, good practical accuracy, excellent reliability, and high modularity for tailoring the weapon to the mission. The rifle uses the most common ammunition and magazines in the land. The only downside is the weight and the relative scarcity of spare parts and knowledgeable support compared to the more common models. This means, should you choose to go with APC223, a repair kit consisting of extra springs and small parts — or even an entire pre-assembled lower for the quickest possible repair — would be wise to have. Some of the parts would even fit inside the pistol grip. The other plus, often overlooked, is that practice with a weapon improves proficiency.

Since this rifle is so pleasant and comfortable in use, you would want to practice with it as often as the ammunition supply and time availability allow. It's that much fun to shoot. FM

BROWNELLS' BRN-180 NEXT GEN. 180, OR NEXT OBSCURE FIREARM?

By Michelle Hamilton

The ArmaLite AR-180 and AR-18, a semi-automatic sporter and selective-fire assault rifle variation of Eugene Stoner and ArmaLite's later production rifles. Designed in 1963 by Sullivan, Stoner, Dorchester and Miller, the AR-18 was designed as a "cost effective" combat rifle, being cheaper to produce than the Colt M16. Largely produced from steel stampings, the AR-18/180 made for a quality and somewhat unique rifle, considering that it utilized a gas piston, over the AR-15's gas impingement system. While never officially adopted by any nation's military, it did see use by the Irish Republican Army (aka IRA) with success against the British, and was the rifle featured in the Irish song "My Little ArmaLite."

Outside of the short use by the IRA, both the 18 and commercial 180 practically fell into obscurity except when the new ArmaLite company (formally Eagle Arms) released the polymer receiver AR-180B for a short time during the domestic assault weapons ban (which lasted for 10 years; 1994–2004). A little over 10 years ago, there were two aluminum lower receiver models manufactured, by the retro AR company NoDak Spud, as replacement options for the plastic AR-180B lower. These were popular with AR-180 aficionados.

As a platform however, the AR-18/180 influenced several other rifles, including the popular HK G36. The unique little ArmaLite had practically been lost to time, outside of rifle enthusiasts and collectors. Thanks to Brownells and Primary Weapons Systems the AR-180 not only made a return, but also entered the 21st Century with modularity and styling to match. Enter, the Brownells BRN-180 rifle.

Unlike its aging brethren, the Brownells BRN-180 is largely produced from forged aluminum, over the original's steel stampings. Featuring a free-floated lightweight one turn in seven inches twist barrel, the BRN-180 is quite the lightweight “handy-rifle.” Minor changes from the Generation 1 to Generation 2 made the ‘little ArmaLite’ somewhat more user friendly and in my opinion, a more solid choice for a defensive carbine. While the 180 did lose its quick(ish) detach fore-end and rail system for a threaded screw attachment system, I find this system more rugged and robust.

With the stock folded, the already compact and slim design of the BRN-180 becomes even smaller.

The entire design is very sleek in comparison to the AR-15. No longer is a receiver extension and external buffer system necessary. It is a completely different operating system than the traditional ArmaLite Rifle. Utilizing an adjustable, long-stroke gas-piston system of operation, the compact bolt carrier rides on two guide rods, accompanied by two recoil springs. This twin recoil system balances out the operation of the firearm, making for extremely smooth operation.

Unlike its predecessor, the BRN-180 transfers several components over from the typical AR pattern rifle, including lower parts and the ability to utilize AR pattern, small frame receivers. Luckily, Brownells took it a step further, also releasing two corresponding lower receivers. The BRN-180M lower features modern AR-15-type styling that goes hand in hand with the modern design cues of the modern 180 upper. The other lower offering, designated just BRN-180, however, is styled similar to that of the original 180 lower receiver with the slanted mag well. I like that Brownells is offering the ability to build a complete, yet customizable rifle and pistol platform with their 180s.

Being a customizable platform to suit almost everyone’s desires, Firearms News Editor-in-Chief Vincent L. DeNiro built his BRN-180 along the lines of: “What would the AR-18 look like today if it became the service rifle for the U.S. military in the 1960s?” Keeping as true to the original profile as possible, his modernized version included parts from Magpul, Midwest Industries, SIG Sauer, AR180S.com, Jard, MDT, and Manticore Arms. You can read his review in an upcoming issue.

Initial Impressions

Having spoken a couple of times with friend and fellow ArmaLite fan Caleb Savant of Brownells on the BRN-180,

The Midwest Industries aluminum and steel constructed folding stock matches nicely to the BRN-180’s finish. While the rubber stopper does help protect the finish of the 180 upper, the folding stock still scuffs the anodizing.

The rubber stopper found on the side of the upper does its job well, but as noted, it doesn’t protect the finish completely.

Robust, well made, nicely finished, the Midwest Industries folding stock fits well and works great.

With an original AR-180 shown on top for comparison, Firearms News Editor-in-Chief Vincent L. DeNiro built his BRN-180 along the lines of: "What if the AR-18 became the service rifle for the U.S. military in the 1960s, and what would it look like today?" Keeping as true to the original profile as possible, his modernized version included parts from Magpul, Midwest Industries, SIG Sauer, AR180S.com, Jard, MDT, and Manticore Arms. His review will appear in an upcoming issue. (Vincent L. DeNiro photo)

Handguard removal is as simple as removing a 5/32 hex head screw. With a couple taps, it comes right off revealing the lightweight barrel and piston system.

Note how the handguard not only locks into position with the upper receiver lug, but also both guide rods lock into the handguard as well. Rock solid and robust design.

The piston block is quite lightweight and low profile, adding to the theme of "compact and lightweight." Note the simple piston adjustment located on the front of the piston and block assembly.

I was pleased to learn they typically use a mix of CMMG and Sons of Liberty Gun Works components in their lower parts kits. I have always been a fan of CMMG products, and their lower parts kits have long been a "go-to" of mine, due to their consistency, quality and repetition. Another great company, is Sons of Liberty Gun Works. I like that they use KNS 17-4 stainless detents and 17-7 springs, with their springs typically always being from SpringCo/Tactical Springs. I can always count on receiving AISI-8620 investment cast and properly heat-treated lower components (1095 disconnect). The same, 'boring consistency' is what I want each and every time.

When the upper receiver arrived however, I was supplied with a Geissele/ALG lower parts kit. This contained the ALG "enhanced mil-spec" trigger group, along with all the other standard pins, detents, springs, and components. The Geissele/ALG components contained all Schmid Tool (Geissele marked of course) lower parts, investment cast, along with great looking springs and detents.

When assembling the lower receiver, I noted several things that impressed me. One of which is the threaded bolt release housing. This is typically found on premium billet receiver sets. It was a nice addition to this receiver, and I also like the addition of the rear tensioning screw. Overall, the receivers were nicely finished and uniformly anodized, with a great upper to lower match.

The ALG trigger was just, nothing to write home about and was quite "mil-spec." Breaking at six pounds, it wasn't that it was a "bad" trigger, it just left a lot to be desired. So, I swapped it for a Airborne Arms Geronimo single-stage trigger. With this the rifle began to feel more 'in tune' with what it should be. Being sleek, lightweight, fast handling, the 180 deserves a better than mil-spec trigger. The A2 grip from Luth AR was quickly swapped as well and a spare B5 used in its place. The B5 simply fits my hand better.

Using the side-folding, fixed extruded stock from Midwest Industries, the rifle came together quite nicely. The stock has great styling, which lend to the aesthetics of the carbine. While well-built, it does add nearly a pound to the rifle. This comes from its 6061 aluminum and 4140 steel construction. However, the allocation of the weight balances the rifle out quite nicely. While the Midwest Industries stock will work on other firearms, it's like they designed it for the BRN-180. It offers the optimal cheek weld for lower co-witness optics, iron sights and flows well with the rifle overall.

Pros

While I like an adjustable gas system, sometimes firearms can have "too much adjustment." An example of this is the FN FAL. The BRN-180 has two settings, one for suppressed and one for non-suppressed. This is optimal for defensive use in my opinion, as for defense, simplicity is key. Brownells and PWS really did their homework here and based their adjustments off of an overall reliability

The bolts themselves look quite similar, with locking lugs, ejector and extractor all located in the same place. Note the similarities between the AR-15 and BRN-180.

Smaller, lighter, and simpler, the BRN-180 operating system is a cleaner alternative to its gas impingement AR-15 and AR-10 brethren.

aspect, over a "tuning" or recoil reduction aspect. I also like that they are clearly and plainly marked, with clear and audible clicks into position. There simply is no mistaking which position the gas system is in.

The free-float rail systems are ones which I like. Using a full-length top rail and MLOK positions at the 3, 6 and 9 o'clock positions allow the user to outfit the carbine with any form of accessory. The rail attachment for the Generation 2 is a singular hex head screw, located on the bottom of the upper. It interfaces with the upper receiver, allowing for quick detachment and access to the gas system, a simple screw removal and light couple of taps removes the rail. On the top of the rail system, there is a witness hole for the gas system adjustment.

Unlike its gas impingement siblings, the BRN-180 uses a substantially longer gas system. From a person coming heavily from direct impingement guns of this style, I was a bit taken aback at the location of the gas block journal. Fortunately, this was all calculated, making for an incredibly reliable and mild recoiling rifle. Using 55-grain and 62-grain 5.56mm NATO ball, recoil was subtle, slow, flat and pleasant. It felt nothing like an impingement AR and had a recoil impulse more like that of a 5.45mm AK-74. Even coupled with its light weight, recoil was easily managed, and accurate, fast follow-up shots were no problem. Unlike the abrupt jolt given by AR carbines, it is more like a slow and gentle shove. I attribute a lot of this to the mass of the carrier, the gas system length and the long-stroke gas piston system.

Overall length of the BRN-180's bolt carrier is drastically shorter and lighter than an AR-15s.

The assembled rifle proved well-balanced, handled well and is easy to operate.

I have fired a bit over 600 rounds through the BRN-180 of various loads, including Russian Tula. In terms of reliability, it ran flawless. Due to the rifle being a long-stroke gas piston system, cleanup was simple. I couldn't find much "gunk" in the receiver, bolt or carrier and I believe what deposits that were found were simply from excess oil attracting foreign materials.

Accuracy

Overall, accuracy is good in comparison to its peers and excellent when comparing to an original ArmaLite AR-180. With 55-grain M193 5.56mm NATO FMJ, the BRN-180 was easily able to outperform the original ArmaLite by as much as one inch at 100 yards. While my Costa Mesa produced ArmaLite AR-180 shot well and would offer

Gas piston adjustments are as simple as "U" for unsuppressed and "S" for suppressed. Two positions simplify things, while still allowing the user to adjust for the situation.

While typically using the Aimpoint Comp series (PRO), for 100-yard groups I used the Nightforce SHV, as the 10 power offers a good sight picture and is also compact and works well with the profile of this rifle.

what would be considered "combat effective" accuracy, it is easily overshadowed by the modern Brownells 180. During my brief ownership of the old ArmaLite, I was never able to achieve better than 3 inches at 100 yards, using M193 5.56mm. With M193, the BRN-180 easily shot 2–2.5-inch groups at 100 yards and comparable groups with M855.

This is the second test rifle this year that favored 69-grain Black Hills Sierra MatchKing ammunition over all other tested loads. Accuracy across the board was good using premium ammunition, achieving from 1.5 to two-inch

The BRN-180 shot very well and rivals other defensive or combat rifles in terms of accuracy. With the light profile barrel, I was happy with the 1- to 2-MOA results overall.

For bulk, M855 Armscor 5.56mm, a 1.8-inch, five-shot group is quite acceptable Accuracy. While defensive and Match obviously shoots more consistent groups, I was pleased with this level of accuracy for bulk FMJ.

M193, 55-grain 5.56mm FMJ shot consistently better groups than the M855. While minimal, the difference was there. Overall, very pleased with how accurate the BRN-180 is.

groups at 100 yards with PMC, PPU and Hornady 55-grain soft point. The shining star in the defensive ammunition category though had to be Wilson Combat/Lehigh Defense’s 55-grain Controlled Chaos. This produced respectable 1.25-inch groups at 100 yards. I only achieved sub-MOA groups once and that was with 69-grain Sierra MatchKing handloads, producing a .89-inch five-shot group. Black Hills’s 69-grain MatchKings produced solid and consistent MOA results, while IMI Razorcore and Hornady Match hollow point shot between 1.0 to 1.25-inch groups.

Overall, I am pleased with the accuracy potential and accuracy offered by the BRN-180. It performs consistently and produces great groups, especially for such a light barrel profile.

Cons

While overall a solid carbine, I dislike how open the upper receiver is and can be. Unlike the AR-15, this is a much more open design, and this leaves the rifle vulnerable to foreign debris, dirt and mud. The charging handle on the Sport is both a blessing and a curse. Unlike the standard handle, which angles up and away from the user, this one is simply a large knob protruding from the carrier. Unfortunately, it takes up a lot of real-estate on the upper. Fortunately, charging handles are interchangeable between the standard and Sport.

Heat can become a problem with the BRN-180. Due to the barrel weight, the barrel will heat up quickly under long strings of consistent fire. Groups remained centered, but once heated up they do begin to open between .5 and 1.25 inches. I also noted that, due to the slim nature of the handguard, it seemed to trap heat after prolonged fire, making the fore-end quite warm, but not uncomfortable to the touch.

Brownells not only gave the AR-180 a face-lift, but also brought it gracefully into the 21st century.

Overview

Overall, Brownells did a great job breathing new life back into the ArmaLite AR-180. I like how adaptive the 180 is and while it is not a typical AR pattern rifle, it will accept several components of the AR-15. I like its compact nature, light weight, reliability, recoil impulse and how well it shoots. A solid performer, it would make a great preparedness rifle for any freedom-loving individual. Nice job Brownells! FN

Why Some People Over 60 Don't Need Glasses

Americans are maintaining healthy vision into old age thanks to a unique, once-a-day capsule.

Americans are snatching up a new supplement for optimal eye health already popular with the Palm Beach elite.

The formula blends powerful natural ingredients to promote strong and healthy eyes as they age. Dr. Al Sears, the regenerative medicine specialist behind the solution, says its past time for all Americans to get the chance to protect their vision.

"Your eyes are one of the most complex organs you have," he said. "They need specific nutrients and minerals to stay sharp and healthy, but it's harder than ever to get these things from our diets."

Eye health is one of the most common challenges Americans can expect to face in their lifetimes. Roughly 75 percent of adults in the United States use some type of vision correction such as glasses or contacts.

"No one wants to be completely dependent on glasses or contacts," Dr. Sears added. "My new formula has already helped my patients maintain their independence, and I want the wider public to have that same chance."

Dr. Sears' eyecare supplement, known as NutraVision, has been making a profound impact since it's become available to the public. However, researchers have already noted just how potent its ingredients are.

Legendary Vision

Bilberries, dubbed by doctors as the "night vision nutrient," are one of the ingredients that make NutraVision so effective. According to legend, British Royal Air Force pilots consumed a jam made from these inky blue berries to help them strike their targets with devastating accuracy during nighttime raids in World War II.

Now, they're helping Americans maintain clear vision for life.

In a two-year study on patients experiencing gradual loss of sight, researchers found that taking just 120 milligrams of bilberry anthocyanins per day helped shore up their defenses. Visual function improved by around 30 percent, whereas a placebo group that did not take the berries continued to experience a decline. The results were published in the Journal of Medicinal Food.

Another study published in Japanese Pharmacology and Therapeutics revealed that bilberry extract helped patients defend against eye-fatigue.

Look on the Bright Side

Eyebright, another natural medicine used for centuries all over the world, complements bilberry to help users resist the eye irritation and redness that can come with loss of sleep or over-exertion.

Modern day researchers have lauded the herb for its ability to protect the cornea from stress. In a test-tube study, scientists observed that eyebright extracts helped maintain healthy functioning cornea cells when exposed to agitating substances.

Eyebright's protective powers were further examined in a human study involving 65 adults. Researchers gave participants eye drops containing eyebright extracts three times per day.

At the end of the study, 81 percent of participants noticed a soothing effect, while the rest reported their eyes felt better. The results were published in the Journal of Alternative and Complementary Medicine.

Sharp and Alert

NutraVision's efficiency owes itself to a truly unique blend of natural wonders. Another one of those is taurine, which many readers may recognize from the labels on energy drinks and other foods.

Taurine is a naturally occurring amino acid. In humans, high levels of taurine are concentrated in the eyes. According to researchers, this amino acid delivers the robust defense the eyes need to maintain good eye health into old age.

Concentrations are particularly high in the retina, the part of the eye that sends light signals to the brain allowing you to see.

Studies show that supplementing taurine supports retina function and maintain youth-like eye health.

Natural Protection

Another ingredient included in the NutraVision blend is lycopene, a tomato-based antioxidant linked to several health benefits, including strong, healthy eyes.

In a case control study, researchers compared participants with less lycopene in lipid fractions of their blood with people with more optimal eye health. The study authors believed that lycopene protects other eye-related carotenoids.

In another study of 167 patients, researchers found that higher lycopene levels in the blood were associated with support for better eye health over time.

Keep Your Eyes Strong

Rounding out NutraVision's cocktail of eye health wonders is a generous supply of zinc—mineral your eyes depend on.

Science has shown that zinc is vital for optimal eye health, with the enzyme functioning as a potent antioxidant. Researchers have linked it to the formation of visual pigments in the retina. According to the National Eye Institute, consuming healthy levels of zinc supports healthy vision.

Give Your Eyes the Good Nutrition They Need Everyday

In a John Hopkins study, researchers determined that if every American took daily zinc supplements, more than 300,000 of them could maintain healthy vision and good eye health over the next five years.

NutraVision combines zinc with natural herbs and essential vitamins to give the eyes the defense they need to weather age-related stress.

How to Get NutraVision

While NutraVision is quickly becoming a popular go-to for eye health, it's not something you'll find in stores.

Instead, Dr. Sears is allowing the public to purchase it directly from his clinic in Palm Beach, Florida.

"The medical establishment loves to drag its feet, and I didn't want to force people to sit around and wait when they can take action right now," he said.

The anti-aging specialist is also offering a full, money-back guarantee for anyone not fully satisfied with the product.

"You shouldn't have to risk anything to protect your vision," Dr. Sears added. "If you're not completely satisfied, just send me back the bottle and any unused product, and I'll get you your money back."

BRAND NEW “ASSAULT WEAPONS” BAN FAILS TO GET VOTE IN SENATE

By Mark Chesnut

If there's one thing for certain about Second Amendment politics, it is that U.S. Senate Democrats would love to institute a sweeping ban on the majority of semi-auto firearms in the United States.

We told you recently how a pair of senators had introduced a new ban on so-called “assault weapons” under a different name to try to fool those not well-versed in firearms. Calling it the “Gas-Operated Semi-Automatic Firearms Exclusion Act,” Sen. Martin Heinrich, D-New Mexico, and Independent Sen. Angus King of Maine introduced the measure on Nov. 30 that would ban nearly all AR-style and many other semi-auto rifles, along with firearm magazines that can hold more than 10 rounds of ammunition.

Not to be outdone, Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer recently attempted to have the Senate vote on a different sweeping “assault weapons” ban bill. Schumer brought Senate Bill 25, titled the “Assault Weapons Ban of 2023,” to the floor Dec. 6 on unanimous consent, meaning all senators present must be in favor of the measure in order to hold an official vote.

The ban is basically a rehash of past such measures and would outlaw a wide variety of commonly owned firearms based on cosmetic features of those guns. In bringing the ban to the floor, Sen. Schumer attempted to shame Republicans who he thought might be in opposition to the measure.

“By passing the Assault Weapons Ban today, we can help save lives, get these weapons off our streets and prevent further tragedies,” he said on the Senate floor. “So, today Republicans face a choice as they do every day. We say to our Republican friends: stand with families fearing for their lives, or stand with the gun lobby and block this Assault Weapons Ban.”

That same day, Schumer brought two other measures — one a gun storage requirement, the other a “universal background check” measure — to the floor, also on unanimous consent. Fortunately, none of the bills had the support needed for a floor vote to be called.

By bringing the measures up for unanimous consent, Sen. Schumer appears to be signaling to America that the Democrats will continue to support gun bans and expanded background checks, while at the same time protecting Senate Democrats from having to go on record in voting for those ensure.

One thing's for certain: We haven't heard the end of this effort. No matter what they call common semi-auto firearms, they'll be back next year, if not later this year, trying to force a ban through Congress. FN

HUNTER BIDEN'S LAWYERS MOUNT 2A DEFENSE AGAINST FIREARMS CHARGES

By Mark Chesnut

You just can't make this stuff up! We detailed back in June how it was possible that first son Hunter Biden's lawyers might choose to mount a Second Amendment defense against his pending gun charges based on last year's landmark Supreme Court decision in New York State Rifle & Pistol Association v. Bruen.

Fast forward to this week, and on Dec. 11, attorneys for the president's son began making that case in federal court, saying that the charges of lying on a federal background check form and possessing a firearm while addicted to unlawful substances were “unprecedented” and “unconstitutional.”

At odds is whether the law barring lying on the background check form and another law forbidding drug addicts from possessing firearms is constitutional under Bruen. By the new standard, for the law to be constitutional prosecutors must show that there exists a “historical precedent from before, during and even after the founding [that] evidences a comparable tradition of regulation?”

The irony is, of course, that President Joe Biden continues to call for “enhanced” and even “universal” background checks for firearm sales, even as his son's attorneys argue that the existing background check law is unconstitutional.

In 2018, Hunter Biden purchased a firearm from a licensed dealer, and, while filling in Form 4473, responded “no” to the question of whether he was “an unlawful user of, or addicted to, marijuana or any depressant, stimulant, narcotic drug, or any other controlled substance.” However, per Hunter's own account of his addiction — as chronicled in his 2021 book, Beautiful Things — it is almost certain that he was an addict at the time he purchased the gun.

Under the terms of the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act of 1993 — a law that then-Sen. Joe Biden shepherded through the U.S. Senate — lying on Form 4473 is a felony punishable by up to 10 years in federal prison.

It will be interesting to see what transpires as the younger Biden's attorneys argue against his dad's prosecutors on whether these matters are protected under the Second Amendment or not. FN

"The right of the people to keep & bear arms has been recognized by the General Government; but the best security of that right after all is, the military spirit, that taste for martial exercises, which has always distinguished the free citizens of these States;.... Such men form the best barrier to the liberties of America."
Gazette of the United States,
October 14, 1789, 211, col.
2.

"It is undoubtedly true that all citizens capable of bearing arms constitute the reserved military force or reserve militia of the United States as well as of the states, and, in view of this prerogative of the general government, as well as of its general powers, the states cannot, even laying the constitutional provision in question out of view, prohibit the people from keeping and bearing arms, so as to deprive the United States of their rightful resource for maintaining the public security, and disable the people from performing their duty to the general government." U.S. Supreme Court, upholding a union-busting law, 1886.
